[B]egin at U.S. talks — firm but flexible

By WOLF BLITZER
[Jerus]alem Post Correspondent

[WASH]INGTON. — Prime Minister [Menahem] Begin demonstrated both [flexibil]ity and firmness on some of [the rem]aining unresolved issues in [P]alestinian autonomy [negotia]tions during his talks with [Presid]ent Jimmy Carter this week, [officials] said.

[Accord]ing to U.S. and Israeli of[ficials, t]he prime minister refused [to yield] at all on two key issues: [the que]stions of East Jerusalem [Arabs v]oting for the proposed [Palestin]ian self-governing authori[ty, and] whether legislative or [executive fun]ctions should be extend[ed to th]at council.

[On some] of these matters, officials [said,] the prime minister was [firm] in rejecting Egypt's [de]mands.

[B]egin was much more [flexi]ble on some other impor[tant iss]ues, including the respon[sibilities] of the proposed "con[tinuing c]ommittee." The Camp [David Acc]ords say this committee [will be fo]rmed following the elec[tion of] the self-governing authori[ty. It] will consist of represen[tatives f]rom that authority, Israel, [Egypt an]d Jordan.

[It was a]greed, officials here said, [that the] "continuing committee" [will] include representatives [of the] U.S. and could discuss [such ke]y matters as the develop[ment of W]est Bank and Gaza Strip [resou]rces and other economic [...]

[...] Egyptian officials, in re[cent years], have come to view the [committee] as a possible forum for [...] issues on which final [agreement] at this stage remains [...]

[At a n]ews conference late last [night P]resident Carter insisted [that the] major problem in the [autonomy] negotiations was still [...] the "duties and respon-sibilities" of the proposed self-governing authority.

He insisted that success in these areas would constitute "a major step forward," and "other details" could then be resolved "without delay." He listed among these details such issues as water, land, and other specific "security issues" and terrorism.

Begin was also "somewhat" forthcoming, the officials said, on the matter of "internal" security for the West Bank and Gaza during the proposed five-year transition period. There was enough of an opening in his position, the officials noted, to suggest that this question would not stand in the way of an agreement.

Before leaving last night for nearby Andrews Air Force Base and his return flight to Israel, Begin was busy granting news media interviews and meeting, both publicly and privately, with American Jewish leaders.

A White House statement, issued yesterday morning, said that the next round of autonomy negotiations would resume in Herzliya before the end of April. Later the talks will shift to Egypt.

U.S. officials said that special Middle East envoy Sol Linowitz and his deputy, James Leonard, will return to Israel and Egypt for this final non-stop round of talks designed to try to nail down final agreement on the autonomy scheme before May 26, which remains the "goal" of the three parties.

President Carter yesterday was upbeat in describing his recent discussions with Begin, which he said were "remarkably good." He called his sessions last week with Sadat "excellent."

S. Lebanon militias lift barriers to UN traffic

Jerusalem Post Staff and Agencies

The Christian militias of South Lebanon yesterday evening removed the roadblocks they had put up five days earlier to limit the movements of UNIFIL forces and prevent them from getting food and water.

At the same time, Palestine Liberation Organization forces renewed shelling of the Christian enclave last night.

Aside from raising the hackles of UN forces in the area, the roadblocks caused concern in Washington and were the subject of a query Prime Minister Menahem Begin telephoned from there to the office of Defence Minister Ezer Weizman in Jerusalem yesterday, at the request of Secretary of State Cyrus Vance.

The militias of Maj. Sa'ad Haddad put up the roadblocks throughout Southern Lebanon after a clash last Saturday with UNIFIL forces at the village of Al-Tiri, in which three militiamen and a Fijian soldier were killed. An Irish soldier, Pvt. Stephen Griffin, died on Wednesday in Haifa's Rambam Hospital of wounds suffered during that clash.

Another incident between Haddad's men and UN forces kept tension high yesterday. A UN spokesman said militiamen drove an armoured vehicle over the fence surrounding a UN observation post on the border with Israel and forced the unarmed observers out at gunpoint.

The evicted UN personnel at the border post "Hin" included Dutch soldiers of the UN peacekeeping forces that had been stranded there during the recent IDF incursion into Lebanon.

Last night's renewed shelling of the Christian enclave from Beaufort Castle is apparently linked to the first anniversary of Haddad's declaration of "Free Lebanon" in the south, which is being observed today. In anticipation of clashes, schoolchildren and most Christian workers in the south will stay at home today.

In Washington, U.S. officials told Begin of their concern over the militias' attack on the border observation post yesterday. Discussing Haddad, Begin conceded at one point, "We have problems with him."

Carter invites Peres; Begin returns to deal with Weizman

Defence Minister Ezer Weizman, second from right, his wife Reuma, and OC Northern Command Avigdor Ben-Gal talk with children at Kibbutz Misgav Am yesterday, 19 days after the terrorist attack there.

Prime Minister Menahem Begin returns home today after a four-day absence to a vastly changed political scene. Ezer Weizman's call for early elections, and the furious reactions to this step in his own party Herut and in other coalition parties, have set off tremors that could lead to his resignation and possibly to the fall of the government. These developments were given resonance by U.S. President Carter's invitation to Labour's Shimon Peres, with the implication that he is viewed by Washington as Israel's next prime minister.

Jerusalem Post Staff

Opposition leader Shimon Peres leaves next week for the U.S., where he will meet with President Jimmy Carter at Carter's invitation, Labour Party officials said last night.

Foreign Ministry officials said they had no knowledge of the imminent Carter-Peres meeting.

TV reporter Haim Plattner, who broke the story, said that Ambassador Ephraim Evron had been instrumental in setting up the meeting, and that he had been working for several months to bring it about. The Foreign Ministry officials said they had no knowledge of such efforts by Evron.

In Washington, Israel Embassy officials said the meeting had been arranged through the U.S. Embassy in Tel Aviv. The White House merely informed the Israel Embassy of the session, they said, strongly denying the Israel Television report that Ambassador Evron had made the arrangements.

White House and State Department officials said that the Peres meeting with Carter had been "in the making" for over a month. It was partly related to Peres' just-released article on Camp David in the prestigious U.S. quarterly, "Foreign Affairs."

The Americans strongly denied that the meeting could be construed as representing any interference whatsoever in domestic Israeli politics, although they conceded that the timing of Peres' announcement — coming on the heels of Defence Minister Ezer Weizman's interview — could prove somewhat embarrassing. White House officials yesterday played down the meeting, insisting that it was "routine" for the president to meet with the opposition leaders of America's democratic allies. They noted several precedents, including Carter's sessions with Willy Brandt of West Germany. U.S. officials are very sensitive to any appearance of interfering in Israeli politics. They recognize that U.S. support for any Israeli candidate could prove counterproductive to overall U.S.

Defence minister said what he planned to say

Jerusalem Post Staff

Aides of Defence Minister Ezer Weizman said yesterday that he had decided to call publicly for early elections after it became apparent that his resignation alone would not bring down the government: it would simply result in either Moshe Arens or Ariel Sharon — both hardliners — succeeding him.

What remained unclear last night is why Weizman chose to make his call while Prime Minister Menahem Begin was still in the U.S.

In Washington Begin yesterday said he would react to Weizman's call for early elections only after returning to Israel.

In response to reporters' repeated questioning about the Weizman bombshell and whether it might damage the two men's friendship, Begin played on the double meaning of the Hebrew word "Moked" which means "focus" (and is the name of the television programme on which Weizman was interviewed) but which also means "stake."

"He was my friend and is my friend. Friendship is not destroyed on the Moked," Begin said.

Begin said that he would closely read the transcript of the entire interview following his return this morning, and only then "if there is a need" will he respond.

"I'm in Washington," he said. "The comments were made in Jerusalem, which is where I will react."

Weizman was in Kibbutz Misgav Am yesterday where he refused to comment about the political furore he has created. He said that he had

Even Weizman's camp disturbed by remarks

By SARAH HONIG
Post Political Reporter

TEL AVIV. — Impotent rage yesterday characterized coalition reaction to Defence Minister Ezer Weizman's call for early elections.

It was clear last night, however, that nothing would be done before the prime minister returns from America and indicates how he wishes to handle Weizman's challenge.

Even Weizman's most ardent supporters in the coalition took him to task yesterday, especially for having criticized the government on television while the prime minister was engaged in crucial talks with the U.S. president.

The angriest reactions, predictably, came from Herut. The party Knesset faction executive met for about an hour at noon yesterday, took strong issue with Weizman, and expressed unequivocal support for Premier Menahem Begin, but let things go at that.

The whole faction will convene only after Independence Day, by which time Begin, due to return today, will have indicated whether he prefers to let the storm blow over or whether he intends to force Weizman out of the government.

The Herut Central Committee will not be convened unless it is clear that Begin wishes the incident aired at the party forum. Committee chairman Avraham Shechterman noted yesterday that "the committee is empowered to pick the party's representatives in the government and to draft the list of Knesset candidates. Yet it will be entirely up to Begin to decide whether he wants the committee to address itself to the Weizman

[Car]ter embargoes all food, [med]ical supplies to Iran

[WASHING]TON. — President Jim[my Carter] yesterday intensified [pressure] for the release of 50 [American] hostages in Teheran by [banning] exports of food and [medicine] to Iran and urging U.S. [allies to] follow suit.

[He] also announced further [U.S.] action in the field of [commu]nications and shipping. [...] action falls just short of a [...]

A senior White House official said, "It will be difficult to implement our sanctions by ourselves."

The impact of cutting off food and medicine would be slight because a refusal of American dock workers to load supplies has already ended shipments to Iran. But allied action would deal a severe blow to Iran and intensify pressure for the prompt release of the hostages.

Officials said they did not have any firm indication of how U.S. allies would respond to the president's call for support.

In Strasbourg, the European Parliament passed a resolution urging its nine member countries to break off diplomatic relations with Teheran and to take "all necessary and possible measures" until Iran releases the hostages. (Reuter, UPI)

Mortars hit Beirut for third day

BEIRUT. — Heavy fighting with mortars, rockets and machineguns broke out anew in Beirut yesterday, carrying savage clashes between pro-Iraq Palestinian terrorists and pro-Iran Shia Moslems into the third straight day.

Police said a total of 20 combatants had been killed and more than 40 wounded in the proxy war that Iraq and Iran, striving for dominance in the Persian Gulf, are fighting out in Beirut and Southern Lebanon.

A police spokesman said five bodies were recovered from embattled areas in southern Beirut during a short-lived ceasefire arranged by Syrian troops stationed in Lebanon.

The clashes came two days after thousands of Shia Moslems marched in Beirut in angry demonstrations started by a report in a Kuwait newspaper that Iraqi authorities had killed one of their top religious leaders in Baghdad.

Several shells reportedly fell on the Iraqi embassy and the crowd of protesters was fired upon by terrorists of the pro-Iraq Arab Liberation Front.

North of the capital, officials from the country's main Christian political parties held crisis talks as an uneasy calm prevailed in the coastal town of Safra and nearby villages after two days of machinegun and mortar battles. (AP, UPI)

[The m]inister was answering [...] in parliament in the first [...] debate on foreign affairs [since P]resident Valery Giscard [d'Estaing']s return from the Per[sian Gulf] states, where he had call[ed for] Palestinian self-[determi]nation.

[Sever]al deputies, including [some] of the government par[ties, ha]ve tabled questions criticis-ing the government for its pro-Arab stand.

"The settlement proposed by France implies the renunciation by each of the parties of whatever is excessive, unjustified or unaccepable in its claims," Francois-Poncet said.

"I can state clearly that this applies to the PLO, and also to Israel. Our stand implies no preference for either side."

Another prominent French parliamentarian, Communist Party leader Georges Marchais, returned to Paris yesterday from Beirut, where he had met with PLO chief Yasser Arafat. Marchais, whose party toes the Moscow line and is violently anti-Israel, said that Israel is responsible for the tension in the Middle East. He called on the French government to take steps to bring about official recognition of the PLO and expanded peace talks.

Zimbabwe born at midnight

SALISBURY, Zimbabwe. — Africa's newest independent state of Zimbabwe was to be born at the stroke of midnight last night after a turbulent history of tribal conflicts, 90 years of white minority rule, a rebellion against the British crown and a bloody civil war.

At precisely midnight, British army Sergeant-Major John O'Donnel was to lower the Union Jack from a flagstaff in Rufaro Stadium. Minutes later, an independence flame was to be lighted and the new five-colour standard of Zimbabwe hoisted by Comrade Kambeu, one of some 25,000 guerrillas who fought a seven-year war for control of the previously white-ruled territory.

Formal swearing-in ceremonies of the new president, U.S.-educated Methodist minister Canaan Banana, 44, and Prime Minister Robert Mugabe, 56, the guerrilla leader who won a landslide victory in British-supervised elections in February, were to follow.

Former prime minister Ian Smith, the white minority leader who unilaterally broke from Britain in 1965 to stave off independance under black rule, stayed away from the ceremonies. He said he had a long-standing speaking engagement in neighbouring South Africa. (AP, UPI)

Seren Asher Peri buried on Mt. Herzl

A large crowd of family, friends and comrades-in-arms attended yesterday's funeral of Seren Asher Peri, an air force officer whose body was found on Wednesday in the southern Negev two years after he disappeared. He was buried in the military cemetery on Mt. Herzl, in Jerusalem.

Peri had left his unit in search of help after their jeep broke down in the desert during Pessah 1978. He apparently slipped and fell into a rocky cleft, dying from injuries suffered when he hit his head. (Itim)

W. Bank shops strike for 'Prisoner Day'

By DAVID RICHARDSON
Jerusalem Post Reporter

Merchants in the West Bank and in East Jerusalem responded almost unanimously to a call for a complete commercial strike yesterday in the administered territories issued by the increasingly active National Guidance Committee to mark "Palestinian Prisoner Day."

Businesses and offices in all major towns of the West Bank, except for Jenin and Jericho, did not open at all yesterday although schools and public transport operated normally. In East Jerusalem the commercial strike was also complete and there were reports of isolated strikes by high school students.

Local mayors claimed that they had been told by the military government not to leave their towns. This, they said, was to prevent them from attending planned rallies and lectures to express sympathy with the 2,850 Palestinians held in Israeli jails on security-related offences. Instead they and other civic leaders visited detainees' families.

East Jerusalem dailies carried conflicting reports about a planned meeting by mayors to discuss the military government's decision to delay municipal elections in the area. "Al-Quds" reported that such a meeting was planned for today or Saturday while "A-Sha'ab" carried a denial of similar reports by El-Bira Mayor Ibrahim Tawil.

Last month the mayors played what they called a "cat and mouse game" with the military authorities and met in Ramallah despite a ban on meetings devoted to political rather than municipal issues.

The National Guidance Committee, a 21-member unofficial pro-PLO group of political leaders in the West Bank, has been increasingly open about its bid for leadership in the territories in the past few months.

This coincides with what observers feel is an increasingly pervasive lack of purpose in the military government which is confused by the vacuum in political decisions regarding the future of the area.

Officials balk at car allowance cut

Jerusalem Post Reporter

TEL AVIV. — Senior civil servants yesterday balked at the government's plan to link their car allowances to the cost-of-living index.

Their representatives, who met here yesterday, insisted that their allowances continue to be linked to the price of fuel and of spare parts. During the coming months, fuel prices are likely to rise by 70 to 80 per cent while the cost-of-living index will go up by only 35 per cent, they said.

According to the government's new plan, all car allowances will be cut by half. But half of the money saved will be paid to those car owners whom the ministerial directors-general think deserve supplementary allowances.

The senior civil servants said that the directors-general and the people closest to them will take a big chunk of the allowance unless there are clear criteria on how to distribute the money.

But they welcomed the decision to pay the allowance whether the officials use their own cars on out-of-town trips or not. Now they will have an incentive to conserve energy and go by bus or with colleagues, they said.

Junkies panic over drug shortage

By YORAM BAR
Jerusalem Post Reporter

TEL AVIV. — Hundreds of addicts throughout the country are "panicking" because of an acute drug shortage caused by successful police raids on suppliers, a senior police officer said yesterday.

Sgan-Nitzav Moshe Friedman, head of the Tel Aviv district detectives, said that the shortage is causing a sharp rise in drug prices. Many regular users of hard drugs are forced to use alternatives, such as methadone tablets, whose price has soared from IS0.5 to IS2.50 a tablet.

A senior police source said, "Our information indicates that many junkies are planning criminal acts to finance their drug habit, since prices have multiplied at least fivefold."

The police believe that drug dealers have already sent emissaries abroad to bring back such drugs as heroin and cocaine, which are in especially short supply. "The larger the profits, the more the underworld is prepared to risk to obtain drugs. We know that under this kind of pressure people make mistakes, and that's what we're preparing for," the source said.

Doctor halts woman settler's hunger strike

Jerusalem Post Reporter

TEL AVIV. — A West Bank settler yesterday broke her 26-day hunger strike opposite the Knesset after a doctor determined it would be dangerous to continue.

Inna Viniarski of Tekoa is the second woman ordered by doctors to stop the fast designed to pressure the government to legalize expropriation of Arab-owned West Bank land for Jewish settlement.

Viniarski, 45, was taken to the emergency ward of Hadassah Hospital on Mount Scopus. She was later reported recuperating at home.

Another doctor last night was treating Meir Har-Noi, who heads the Shomron regional council. Har-Noi has been on the orange-juice-and-sugarless-tea diet for 30 days. He was taken to Magen David Adom and late last night was reported under doctor's care in an apartment in Jerusalem.

uestion."

Speaking before Herut's socio-conomic committee, Housing inister David Levy, Weizman's atwhile ally, warned, "I will no nger make any effort to keep Ezer the party. It is unacceptable for im to sit in our midst and imultaneously savage us from vithout. It would be best if Weizman engaged in some soul-earching and drew the necessary onclusions."

Another one-time Weizman ally in Herut, party Knesset faction chairman Haim Kaufman, said "Ezer must now make up his mind whether to stay in or to leave the Likud."

Finance Minister Yigael Hurvitz of Rafi told the Tel Aviv Rotary Club that the time has come for Weizman to "quit the government and go home.

"When I disagreed with the government in September 1978, I left it. So did Meir Amit and Moshe Dayan. Weizman can't have it both ways."

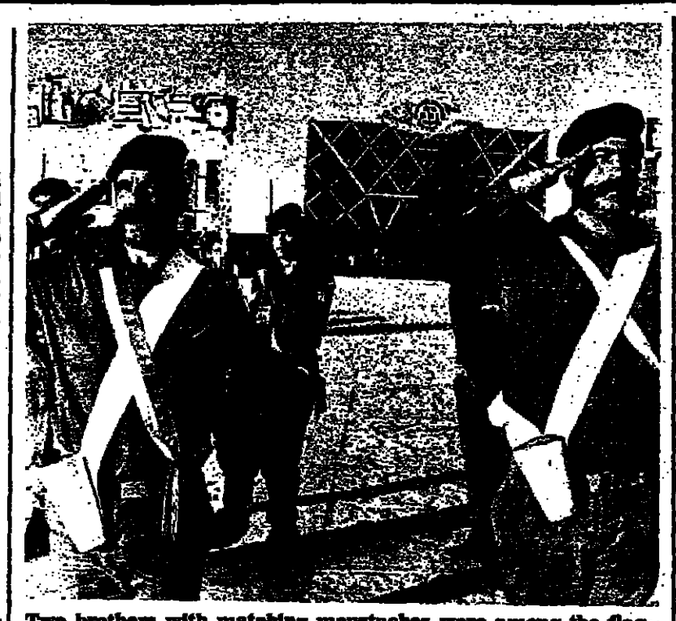

The Likud's La'am faction yesterday accused the defence minister of flirting with Labour.

Among the Liberals, both Deputy Prime Minister Simha Ehrlich and Jewish Agency chairman Arye Dulzin took issue with Weizman's timing. Both had been said to favour a Likud government under his leadership.

Ehrlich tried to play down the significance of Weizman's utterances. "He said only that the possibility of early elections ought to be seriously investigated," he said in Weizman's defence. But he added that the timing of Weizman's pronouncements "is more than unfortunate because Begin is now negotiating in America and we must not pull the rug out from under him." Dulzin agreed that Weizman's words were "ill-timed."

Nevertheless, Dulzin said, Weizman is his candidate for prime minister. Dulzin, who is in Paris now, was speaking to a radio interviewer.

'Dropouts' to be debated in Washington

PARIS (JTA). — A high-level conference will be held in Washington next month to discuss the high level of emigration to America of Jews leaving the Soviet Union with Israeli visas.

Jewish Agency chairman Arye Dulzin said here yesterday that the conference will be attended by two Israeli ministers, still to be named by Premier Menahem Begin; Raphael Kotlowitz, head of the agency's Aliya Department; and himself. Representatives of American Jewish organizations, including HIAS president Ed Shapiro, will also attend the conference, he said.

Dulzin said he hoped the Washington parley would settle "the painful problem of the dropouts which endanger the entire future of Jewish emigration from the Soviet Union."

The two-day Brussels Conference on Soviet Jewry, which Dulzin attended here, closed with a call for stepped-up emigration from the USSR and freedom for Prisoners of Zion there.

Dulzin warned that because of the high dropout rate, the USSR might limit the number of exit visas to 500 a month.

According to figures presented to the Paris meeting, the rate of "dropouts" reached over 62 per cent last month.

Voice of Peace resumes — on FM too

Jerusalem Post Reporter

HAIFA. — After a seven-week break, Abie Nathan's Voice of Peace will resume broadcasting this morning at 6 a.m., in FM stereo in addition to the regular AM broadcast. The FM channel is at 100 megahertz. AM continues at 1540 on the dial.

The Peace Ship was heavily damaged by a storm, and Nathan has spent IS1.2m. in repairs on the ship, which is docked here.

Nathan said yesterday that he is also on the verge of completing negotiations with private investors for building a colour TV station on one of the ship's decks. He said a special deck has been prepared for this project. Broadcasts will begin in about five months if the negotiations are successful.

Three new disc jockeys from the U.S. have been added to the staff, Nathan said. There is also a new captain, from Holland.

CARTER INVITES PERES

Labour sources last night expressed gratification at the Carter invitation to Peres and the fact that he would also be speaking to Secretary of State Cyrus Vance and national security adviser Zbigniew Brzezinski.

The sources attributed this to what they called "growing U.S. awareness that the Likud government's days are numbered, and they are already treating Peres as the next prime minister and making sure they establish contact with him."

Peres said that he would stress his party's opposition to a Palestinian state and negotiations with the PLO, but will advocate bringing Jordan into the autonomy talks and applying autonomy in the Gaza Strip first.

Likud officials would not comment, saying only that they have just heard of the invitation and have no other background. Unofficially, however, considerable displeasure was expressed, and the move was seen as unprecedented — a foreign power negotiating with the government and yet establishing contact with the opposition. "What if we were to invite Ronald Reagan for a round of talks here at this time?" one Herut MK asked.

Meanwhile, in a television interview last night, Peres said that he did not rule out the possibility that Ezer Weizman could serve as minister of defence in a Labour government he would head. He noted, however, that he was in no position at the present to make commitments on the distribution of portfolios in such a future Labour cabinet.

Peres said that it was now absolutely clear that a majority of Knesset members favoured holding earlier elections. He added, however, that it was not certain that all those known to favour early elections would actually vote for dissolution of the Knesset. Peres said he had a mandate from his party to approach all Knesset members to urge them to vote for early elections.

DEFENCE MINISTER

said everything he had to say on television.

The "Moked" programme had been scheduled in advance. Weizman and his aides apparently spent several days thinking about the repercussions before the minister agreed to say what he did.

He couldn't have postponed his TV appearance until next week after Begin's return, his associates pointed out, because he is due to leave for the U.S. on Tuesday to meet with Defence Secretary Harold Brown and to receive an honorary doctorate.

Since Begin had completed his formal negotiations in the U.S., Weizman decided to go ahead despite the premier's absence.

One thing is certain. Weizman's frontal attack was not spontaneous. It was carefully planned, and Weizman had every intention of saying exactly what he did. He waited for an opportunity to inject his prepared comments, and he did so without being asked directly how he felt about early elections.

His aides, who generally felt that he was "excellent" on Wednesday night, privately feel he overdid his criticism of the government's performance and used a few uncalled-for descriptions. Overall, however, they were more than pleased with his handling of the delicate issue, which included dodging questions about his own political aspirations and possible future cooperation with the Labour Party.

There was no indication last night what the defence minister intends to do now. Aides say that in all probability he will sit out the present rash of criticism and wait for his political associates to calm down. Aides pointed out that in his TV appearance Weizman indicated that he intended to devote himself exclusively to defence matters, and they say that that is what he will do. This does not preclude him from feeling that it would be in the national interest to hold early elections so that "certain elements" in the government could be eliminated and that the Likud could re-define where it is going as a party.

Prominent Egyptian Jew facing charge of sedition

By JONATHAN WRIGHT
Jerusalem Post Correspondent

CAIRO. — Shahata Haroun, prominent lawyer and de facto leader of Egypt's small Jewish community, was one of 30 political activists detained for questioning yesterday and charged with setting up the illegal "Egyptian Communist Party."

Haroun will stand trial in the state security court for "forming an illegal organization with intent to overthrow President Anwar Sadat's regime and impose Communist rule by force and terrorism."

Public prosecutor Raga Arabi asked the court on Wednesday to sentence all 30 to hard labour for life. No date has been set yet for the trial.

Egyptian law bans the formation of Communist parties on the grounds that Marxists are pledged to give power to the working class at the expense of other classes. In the same way parties based on religious affiliation are considered socially divisive and therefore illegal.

said that current obstacles standing in the way of an agreement are "less formidable" than were the earlier problems which were overcome on the road to the peace treaty.

The White House communique said Begin and Carter "affirmed the determination of their two countries to continue to work closely together in every sphere and in particular in the joint effort they have undertaken together with President Sadat to bring a just, lasting and comprehensive peace to the Middle East."

The White House also announced yesterday that the State Department's former legal adviser, Herbert Hansell, was formally returning to the autonomy negotiations with the "personal rank of ambassador." Hansell had played a key role during the drafting of the original Camp David accords and the peace treaty.

Begin's unrelenting position on the question of East Jerusalem Arabs' voting in the autonomy elections was underlined yesterday when he addressed several hundred American Jewish leaders at a gathering jointly sponsored by the United Jewish Appeal, Israel Bonds and the Conference of Presidents of Major American Jewish Organizations.

At a meeting of Shafir's top staff yesterday, it was decided to make the Negev an independent district, separate from the Southern District and directly responsible to National Police Headquarters in Jerusalem.

The Southern District is slated to become the Central District, and while it will include Jerusalem, as before, it will also include new areas previously subject to the Northern District and Tel Aviv.

Memorial Day ceremonies begin at 8 p.m. tomorrow

By JUDY SIEGEL
Jerusalem Post Reporter

A two-minute siren will be sounded around the country at 8 p.m. tomorrow, bringing flags down to half-staff, closing entertainment places, stopping traffic and signalling the beginning of Memorial Day.

The central ceremony will be at 9 p.m. tomorrow at Jerusalem's Western Wall in the presence of President Yitzhak Navon and IDF Chief of Staff Rafael Eitan. The ceremony, which will be broadcast live on television and radio, will include the lighting of a memorial beacon by a bereaved mother.

The army radio station will sponsor a memorial meeting at the Tel Aviv Tzavta club, Rehov Ibn Gabirol, starting at 8 p.m. Called "This Tune Can't Be Stopped," the programme, open to the public, will include poetry readings.

At 9.20 a.m. Sunday, ceremonies will be held on former battle sites at Jerusalem's Abu Tor, Yemin Moshe and Ramat Rahel. Education Minister Zevulun Hammer will give a radio address for schoolchildren at 10 a.m. Fifteen minutes later, at the Memorial Pillar opposite Jerusalem's Central Bus Station, Navon will lead a service.

Another siren will sound for two minutes starting at 11 a.m. on Sunday. Again traffic will stop and people will stand at attention to honour the memory of the fallen. When it ends, memorial services will be held at all military cemeteries and IDF monuments. Prime Minister Menahem Begin will attend the ceremony in Safad; other cabinet members and MKs will represent the state around the country.

There will be a memorial service for bereaved parents at Jerusalem's Yad Labanim near the Foreign Ministry at 4.30 p.m.

Israel's 32nd Independence Day will be ushered in on Sunday evening when 12 beacons will be lit on Mt. Herzl in Jerusalem. With this year's theme "Building and Creativity," the dozen people lighting the beacons all are connected with successful firms, kibbutzim or military industries. The ceremony, which will be broadcast starting at 6.45 p.m., will include an address by Knesset Speaker Yitzhak Berman.

The army plans exhibits of arms, ammunition and other equipment on Independence Day at the following locations — the entrance to Ramle camp, at the Beit Lid camp, and in Kiryat Malachi. Hours are 9 a.m. to 4 p.m.

First look at TV series on Zionism

By JUDY SIEGEL
Jerusalem Post Reporter

The first two programmes in the 19-part, IS2m. Israel TV series on Zionism will be screened on the evening before and the evening following Independence Day.

Already two years in the making, the series has been called "the greatest challenge to Israel TV" by Broadcasting Authority director-general Yosef Lapid.

The entire series will be screened, one part per week, starting in the summer or fall.

The first segment, to be shown on Sunday night, is called "The Valley Is a Dream." Using rare archive material, the film will tell the story of the Third Aliya, pogroms in Russia, the Mandate period and the Jewish Brigade.

The part to be screened on Monday night is called "The Trial of the Nations." It will include the UN decision to establish the State of Israel, the story of the ship "Exodus," the underground operations of the IZL and "illegal immigration" from Morocco.

Both segments last an hour.

Produced by Yigal Losain and Ya'acov Eizenman, the series has been plagued by controversy. Organizations of Sephardi Jews, veterans of underground organizations and other interest groups demanded equal time and the right to censor the films. A committee was appointed to ensure fair representation of all groups in the story.

IS750,000 goes to accident victim

TEL AVIV (Itim). — A district court judge yesterday awarded IS750,000 to a nine-year-old boy who sustained a brain injury in a road accident four years ago. The injury will leave him mentally handicapped for the rest of his life.

Yehuda Naim of Ramat Gan was travelling with his father, Avraham, and his mother, Iris, in an army tender driven by Moshe Breda. The driver lost control of the vehicle and it overturned on the Beit She'an-Ta'anachim road.

The family sued the Defence Ministry, which accepted responsibility for the driver and vehicle. The government was also required to pay the family IS84,000 in legal fees.

Whom did Weizman hurt the most?

NEWS ANALYSIS
Sarah Honig

TEL AVIV. — Those who know Ezer Weizman say he is still very much the old Spitfire pilot. They say he is given to launching quick, unexpected and devastating attacks, even if most of the time he takes off without clearance or coordination with ground control.

But was his Wednesday TV appearance — in which he spoke in favour of early elections — just another impulsive sortie? Or was he deliberately taking the biggest gamble in his flamboyant career?

The interviewers did not need to prompt Weizman. The defence minister, who is noted for his flippancy, led his astonished interviewers and volunteered what amounted to a motion of no-confidence in the prime minister.

Those closely associated with Weizman say he is intoxicated by opinion polls which show him as the public's darling. He is not oblivious to the idea of heading a new centre party composed of a moderate Herut element, a large Liberal component and many Democratic Movement splinters. His latest pronouncements may have been geared to precipitate the creation of such a new political entity, possibly by forcing the Liberals and DM to take his cue.

Another scenario involves Weizman's former brother-in-law, Moshe Dayan. Having already left the Begin government, Dayan could be waiting in the wings to collaborate with Weizman in a new conservative-liberal party that would include such Rafi veterans as Zalman Shoval.

But if so, why did Weizman imply that he might not be averse to serving as Shimon Peres' defence minister? Pundits say he was signalling Labour that, should he fail to establish a new centrist party, he might wish to make Labour his new home — and move in with some followers too. There he would join the leadership with other big names, such as Meir Amit and David Golomb who, it is said, will be returning to the Labour fold at the end of May.

Another opinion has it that having made repeated threats in the past few months, Weizman has finally decided to make a dramatic exit from Begin's cabinet. He has crossed his Rubicon in Herut, party pundits were saying yesterday, and the TV interview cannot be compared to Knesset cafeteria quips or temperamental outbursts. If Weizman does not do the "honourable thing," it was said in Herut, he will be thrown out.

Others in Herut say that it is distinctly in Begin's interest to sweep the whole affair under the carpet. Weizman would probably be amenable to pretending he never really intended to drop a bombshell. He will be going to America for a fortnight after Independence Day, which will give Begin ample time to put the incident into deep freeze, they say.

Finally, there are those who insist that Weizman just wants to go home and wait, De Gaulle-like, for the nation to call him to the helm.

Whether he intended it or not, Weizman took the entire political spectrum by surprise. The opposition was justifiably heartened. The government suffered a severe blow, and Labour sources never sounded as confident in predicting early elections.

Much depends on the Liberals and the DM, both of which could bring down the government and both of which could conceivably be cofounders of the much-touted centre party.

The influence on the DM could perhaps be most dramatic. At the

AJC head predicted summit outcome

By DAVID LANDAU
Post Diplomatic Correspondent

The reports from Washington on the summit talks between Prime Minister Menahem Begin and President Jimmy Carter appear to bear out part of the informed prediction made here last weekend by Howard Squadron, president of the American Jewish Congress and a leading candidate to succeed Theodore Mann as chairman of the Conference of Presidents of Major American Jewish Organizations.

"I don't think Carter is going to lean on Begin as much as some people think," Squadron predicted in an interview. "Israel is not going to budge on Jerusalem — and the U.S. is just going to have to accept that."

The weeks ahead, weeks of non-stop autonomy negotiating in Herzliya and Alexandria, will tell whether the second and more risky part of Squadron's forecast will prove true too. The AJC head and leading New York corporation lawyer felt there was the requisite flexibility on the Israeli side to facilitate agreement on the thorny issues of land- and water-exploitation and on the settlements.

"These things can be clarified, categorized, and in that way limited. I think they'll find a formula on this, and on security," Squadron ventured. He gave his opinion after meetings with Begin, Foreign Minister Yitzhak Shamir and chief autonomy negotiator Interior Minister Yosef Burg.

He is also in frequent contact with top U.S. officials, especially with his personal friend Sol Linowitz, the U.S. special envoy to the autonomy talks. "Following this visit to Israel," Squadron said, "I can understand Linowitz's constant optimism."

The toughest part of the package, Squadron felt, would be the "powers and responsibilities" of the autonomy. While each individual component-power was not necessarily of itself significant, he accepted the Israeli viewpoint that the aggregate of these various powers could form the constitutional basis for an independent state.

Squadron dwelt on Carter's intense interest and desire to achieve the autonomy agreement.

Ronald Reagan's candidacy for the Republican nomination for the presidency was shaping up into a serious challenge, since Reagan's bedrock support, though confined to relatively small segments of the population, was solid while Carter's support seemed "always shallow, never intense."

No Democratic candidate this century, Squadron noted, had won the presidency without taking California and New York. Reagan, twice governor of California, must be favoured there — which gave the voters of New York added weight in this election.

Nevertheless, Squadron stressed — and he had made the same point forcefully to Begin — it would be quite wrong for Israel to read the pro-Kennedy, anti-Carter vote in the New York Democratic primary last month as an endorsement for its policies on the West Bank.

There had been anger over the U.S. vote in the UN Security Council; but this did not mean support for the Israeli position. Nor did the New York vote mean, as some Israelis seemed to feel, that Jewish political power in the U.S. was great or growing.

In a presidential contest, Carter's position in New York against ultra-conservative Reagan would be good even today, Squadron assessed. But if Israel and Egypt had reached an autonomy accord — it would be that much better.

On the Soviet dropout issue and the upcoming conference of American Jewish leaders with WZO chairman Arye Dulzin, Squadron said: "The positions we are being asked to take are antithetical to everything we have always stood for." The U.S. Jewish community, and especially his own organization, the AJC, had consistently fought for a liberal U.S. policy towards refugees from all over the globe. How could they now campaign against the legislation which would extend refugee status to Jews coming out of Russia?

In practice, U.S. Jewish communities might in the future provide less funds for aiding the Soviet emigrants, and might "encourage these people to come to Israel. After all, most of us feel they should go to Israel. But no one would be prepared to compel them to do so," he said.

IDF denies Egypt violated truce

Post Military Correspondent

The IDF yesterday denied reports that there were any Egyptian infractions of the Sinai peace accords. The reports appeared in morning newspapers yesterday.

According to an official military source, the Egyptians have fewer tanks, only one-quarter of the armoured personnel carriers, and fewer than the 22,000 men allowed in Zone 'A' under the terms of the agreement. They also have fewer than the 4,000 men allowed in Zone 'B,' the army said.

The army said that constant checks were carried out by the U.S. Sinai Field Mission, both on the ground and from the air, and that a recent check had shown no infractions. When infractions were sighted in the past, the Egyptians corrected them immediately, the army source said.

The army also denied that the El-Arish airfield is being used for military purposes, as yesterday's reports claimed. The field is entirely civilian, they said, adding that there is a small contingent of Egyptian soldiers there for guard duty only.

Remand for engineer at Housing Ministry

A Jerusalem magistrate yesterday remanded a Housing Ministry engineer in police custody for seven days. The Jerusalem district engineer is suspected of demanding a bribe from a building materials contractor.

Part of the evidence against Giora Boyer is on a 45-minute tape of a conversation he had with the contractor, Ma'aruf el-Ali. According to evidence heard in court, the contractor was wearing a concealed microphone-transmitter, but Boyer failed to discover it, though he searched for it.

Ali, who complained to police about the bribe demand, supplies stone from the Hebron area. He was connected with the Azorim company, which has been building for the Housing Ministry in the Ramot quarter. (Itim)

Hoarders flocking after chickens

Jerusalem Post Reporter

TEL AVIV. — A sudden rash of panic buying and hoarding by individuals with freezers and by some butchers has caused a shortage of frozen chicken in some parts of the country.

The Supersol chain of supermarkets claims that all of their frozen chicken has been sold.

But David Hacham, manager of Tnuva's Hypershuk in Rishon Lezion told The Jerusalem Post that he had large quantities available and that he was allowing persons to buy as many chickens as they wanted. He added, however, that he had caught several butchershop owners and meat wholesalers trying to buy large quantities of frozen chicken and he had refused to sell to them.

Ya'acov Doron, managing director of the Poultry Marketing Board, told The Post that there were enough chickens in the country. He also stated that there was no shortage of eggs.

Zia urges 'peace zone' with India

MOSCOW. — The Afghan government yesterday called for talks with Iran and Pakistan on the reduction of armed force in the region and international guarantees for security of each country, the TASS news agency reported.

The proposal calls for talks "without preliminary conditions."

The offer could mark the first opening of moves to resolve the Afghan crisis that has developed into a superpower confrontation between the U.S. and the Soviet Union.

The proposals called for:

- Bilateral talks with Iran and Pakistan on questions of normalizing relations.
- Discussions on "lowering the level of military spending, reduction of armaments and armed forces with appropriate international guarantees of security.
- Talks on reducing tension and ill-will in the activities of mass information media.
- Holding consultations between countries of the Indian Ocean zone and the Persian Gulf area concerning resumption of talks on making the Persian Gulf a zone of peace.

In Salisbury, Pakistani President Zia al-Huq, who arrived yesterday to attend the Zimbabwe independence ceremony, told newsmen that he has made arrangements to hold an urgent summit meeting with Indian Prime Minister Indira Gandhi in hopes of reaching a common stand on the Soviet invasion of Afghanistan.

He said they would also explore the possibility of normalizing relations between their two countries when they meet in Salisbury today.

Zia told a news conference he would urge Mrs. Gandhi to exert pressure on Moscow to end what he called "outright naked aggression by the Soviet Union on Afghanistan."

The meeting will mark the first time that leaders of the two countries have held talks since Mrs. Gandhi met with Zia's predecessor, Zulfikar. Ali Bhutto, to negotiate a peace agreement in the 1972 Indo-Pakistani war.

Zia made his statement at a press conference shortly after Mrs. Gandhi arrived to join representatives of many nations at the celebrations.

French Foreign Minister Jean Francois-Poncet told the National Assembly in Paris yesterday that the entire structure of East-West detente could be shaken to its foundations if the Afghan crisis is not settled quickly.

He said that the French Government maintained its demand for the withdrawal of Soviet troops from Afghanistan, but at the same time intended to keep open its lines of communication with Moscow.

Francois-Poncet, who is to meet Soviet Foreign Minister Andrei Gromyko in Paris next week, went on: "No one is probably better placed than France to make the point that it is up to the Soviet Union to take the necessary steps to restore detente, and to show Moscow the risks it would run in continuing along the path it has taken." Iran executes saboteu

TEHERAN (UPI). — A firing squad yesterday executed four men charged with blowing up oil pipelines in the southern Khuzestan province, bordering Iraq.

In continuing trouble on the western border, the Iranian army complained Kurdish rebels were obstructing the dispatch of reinforcements to the border and attacked two columns on Wednesday.

Six soldiers died and another score were injured when armed rebels ambushed an armoured column near the Qassemlou pass in the West Azerbaijan province.

Another army column was attacked in Qatur, also in the West Azerbaijan area bordering Iraq.

The army and air force at Qatur came under rebel gunfire for the sixth consecutive night Wednesday night.

One rebel was killed and a gendarme hospitalized with gunshot injuries.

The rebels fired on ambulances trying to pick up the wounded, an army spokesman said.

Bonn-Moscow summit may be called off

BONN. — Chancellor Helmut Schmidt was said yesterday to be ready to take up a Kremlin proposal for summit talks, but his reply could hinge on Moscow's reaction to a West German Olympics boycott.

Sources in Schmidt's ruling Social Democratic Party say the chancellor will probably delay making up his mind until after the Bonn cabinet decides on the Olympics issue next Wednesday.

The government has made plain in advance that it will urge West German sportsmen to stay away from the Moscow games, and a tough Soviet response to the final decision would make it hard for Schmidt to accept the Soviet invitation.

There were signs of government confusion on Wednesday before it was announced that the Soviet Union had suggested a Moscow visit by Schmidt this summer.

The disclosure was apparently prompted by a Bonn newspaper report which quoted Warsaw Pact sources as saying the trip was already set. Government spokesmen at first denied the whole story, then acknowledged that a visit had been proposed.

The Kremlin was in fact only renewing an invitation made by Soviet leader Leonid Brezhnev when he visited Bonn in 1978. In recent months Schmidt has twice told parliament that he was prepared to take it up.

The chancellor has also stressed repeatedly that an East-West dialogue is particularly important at a time of world tensions over Iran and the Soviet intervention in Afghanistan.

In publicizing the Soviet proposal, the government moved to allay any concern about a Soviet wedge being driven between West Germany and its allies.

Schmidt met yesterday with East Germany's leading economics official Guenter Mittag, the highest ranking East Berlin politician to cross the border for a visit to West Germany in 10 years. (Reuter, UPI)

Favourable Dutch reaction to 'Death of a Princess'

HILVERSUM, Netherlands (Reuter). — Public reaction was largely favourable when Dutch television on Wednesday night screened a controversial British film about the execution of a Saudi princess, the Dutch Broadcasting Foundation (NOS) said yesterday.

NOS decided to show the film despite a last-minute appeal by the Saudi Arabian ambassador, Sheikh Ziyad Mohamed al-Shawaf, to delay screening so that the Saudi government would have time to take NOS before a Dutch court.

A NOS spokesman said 80 per cent of the 150 phone calls he received were favourable.

Most callers, some of whom said they were wives of Arab migrant workers in the Netherlands, said the film was a good journalistic product which gave a good picture of the Islamic world. Twenty per cent said it could harm Saudi-Dutch relations.

The film, "Death of a Princess," reconstructs the case of Saudi Princess Misha, publicly executed with her lover for adultery in 1977.

Possible retaliation by Moslem extremists against the film is one of the main reasons for tight security at the Eurovision song contest in The Hague tomorrow, NOS sources said. An organization representing many of the 100,000 Moslems in the Netherlands said that it could not be held responsible for any violent reaction to the programme.

Swedish television also said it would screen the controversial film.

Liberia treason trials begin

MONROVIA, Liberia (UPI). — The new military rulers of Liberia on Wednesday amounced the start of treason trials for officials of the late president William Tolbert's regime and promptly brought an American-educated former cabinet member barefoot before an army tribunal for interrogation.

Former justice minister Joseph Chesson, unshaven and wearing a dirty blue shirt and pants, sipped from a bottle of Coca-Cola as he denied charges of corruption and high treason that carry the death penalty.

Chesson was the first of 91 officials arrested in last weekend's coup to appear for questioning.

Government officials and military spokesmen said his appearance meant judicial proceedings against the old regime, which had been promised by the new President Samuel Doe, were under way.

In another development, Radio Elwa in Monrovia reported that the nation's head of the armed forces was killed on Monday in an ambush by troops opposing the new military government. The broadcast, monitored by the BBC, said some of the rebel troops were captured and are awaiting trial, while a massive search was undertaken to find the rebel leader.

Chesson, a portly man with several days' stubble of gray beard, stood barefoot before a panel of five army officers led by Lt. Col. Frank Senkpeni, in a bare room at a military base in do

'100 nations to take part in Olympics'

BUENOS AIRES (AP). — A Soviet sports official said on Wednesday night that Olympic committees of 100 nations had confirmed their participation in Moscow's Olympic Games.

"The U.S. boycott does not affect the games," said Vladimir Koval, vice-president of the Olympic Organizing Committee. But, he added, the absence of American athletes "will be a disappointment for us."

He expressed satisfaction that the U.S. Olympic Committee vote to back President Jimmy Carter's appeal for a boycott was not unanimous. Carter called the boycott to protest the Soviet intervention of Afghanistan.

"Some politicians," Koval said, "want to change the meaning of the Olympic movement, but this is not possible because the games are synonymous with peace, understanding, comprehension and communication among brothers.

"Politics has nothing to do with sports. Mixing them is like mixing two different pairs of shoes."

Koval, who arrived on Wednesday, denied he was here to pressure Argentine government officials, who have not decided whether to send athletes to the games.

Armenian gunmen wound Turkish envoy to Vatican

ROME (UPI). — Armenian gunmen wounded the Turkish ambassador to the Vatican and his bodyguard yesterday in their ninth attack in the capital this year.

Police said Ambassador Vecdi Tuerel had just left his home in the fashionable Parioli quarter of the city and was riding with two bodyguards when their automobile came under sub-machinegun fire from three men hiding behind parked cars on the roadside.

The Turkish ambassador was reported in satisfactory condition at the city's Policlinico hospital, but the bodyguard was listed as serious.

Shortly after the shooting, an anonymous telephone caller told news agency offices in the city it was carried out by a group calling itself "Justice for Armenian Genocide."

Armenian groups have carried out eight previous attacks in Rome this year, including the bombing of a Turkish Airlines office March 10 in which two people were killed and a dozen others wounded.

Three years ago Armenian gunmen killed Taha Carim, Tuerel's predecessor as Turkish ambassador to the Vatican.

In Milan on Wednesday night, four terrorists belonging to an extremist Communist group raided a private radio station, bound and gagged three employees and broadcast a 15-minute tape recording denouncing police action against other extremists, police reported.

Cubans complain of robberies before airlift to Costa Rica

SAN JOSE, Costa Rica (UPI). — Another 157 Cubans landed in San Jose yesterday on the second day of a freedom airlift for 10,800 refugees in the Peruvian Embassy in Havana.

Costa Rican officials said a second airliner carrying another 100 refugees was expected later yesterday.

The latest group, most of them women and children, arrived aboard a Lacsa Boeing 727 and were taken to the old presidential palace, which has been converted into a temporary shelter. They charged that Cuban policemen had ripped off children's earrings as they left the island nation.

Gilberto Puig, 31, said Cuban policemen and supporters of President Fidel Castro insulted him and the other refugees as they arrived at Havana's airport to board the flight that would take them to San Jose.

"They stole earrings from kids and stole our watches and took all our suitcases. They are the thieves, not us," he said, referring to Cuban charges that the refugees are not political exiles but common criminals.

On Wednesday the two airliners shuttled 250 Cuban refugees to San Jose in the first leg of the effort to evacuate the 10,800 persons jammed into the Peruvian embassy in Havana for the past two weeks.

Plot to kill Costa Rica president foiled

SAN JOSE, Costa Rica (AP). — Police said Wednesday they had foiled an attempt to assassinate Costa Rican President Rodrigo Carazo. They said the plan involved two Nicaraguans, a Chilean and a Costa Rican.

Guillermo Marti, director of criminal investigations, told reporters the group had the organization necessary to make an attempt on Carazo's life; but the Nicaraguans, arrested for entering the country illegally, told police of the plot.

Marti said the reported plan called for blowing up Carazo's office or his car with dynamite, but said investigators have not determined the motive for the alleged plot. There was no indication the reported attempt was linked to Costa Rica's acceptance of refugees from the Peruvian Embassy in Havana, Cuba.

Cincinnati wins again in U.S. baseball

NEW YORK (AP). — The Cincinnati Reds, the only undefeated team in the major leagues this season, won their seventh game on Wednesday, beating the San Francisco Giants 5-3 behind the pitching of Mike Lacoss and the hitting of Dan Driessen.

The Philadelphia Phillies trounced the St. Louis Cardinals 8-3 as Manny Trillo and Garry Maddox each singled in two runs during a six-run, ninth-inning burst.

The New York Mets edged the Montreal Expos 3-2 with the help of Jerry Morales' two-run single that capped a three-run third inning.

In American League day games, the Oakland A's downed the Minnesota Twins 6-1, the Boston Red Sox outlasted the Detroit Tigers 10-9 and the Toronto Blue Jays clobbered the Milwaukee Brewers 11-2.

Bogota terrorists to free 3 more hostages tomorro

BOGOTA. — Terrorists holding 20 hostages, most of them diplomats, for nearly two months, said they will free three more hostages tomorrow. But negotiations for the release of the rest are at an apparent standstill.

The Movement 19 terrorists, in statements reported by Bogota newspapers and magazines this week, volunteered to release three hostages from the Dominican Republic embassy on April 19, the 10th anniversary of presidential voting that they claim was rigged.

They did not say which hostages will be freed, but the "El Siglo" newspaper named as likely candidates Haitian Ambassador Luis Leonardo Pierre, reported to have stomach trouble, and Papal Nuncio Monsignor Angelo Acerbi. The paper said the terrorists might release Acerbi to back repeated statements of admiration for the Roman Catholic Church.

The M-19 terrorists stormed the embassy February 27 during a Dominican Republic National Day reception, taking 37 hostages. They have since released 36, and the Uruguyan ambassador escaped. In addition to the U.S., Haitian and Vatican ambassadors, the

Then they ...bore seven years of es... ...and economic decline, ...of which most white ...are spending a large part of their time in uniform.

All in defence of racial injustice and three-car garages, of course. Moreover, many Rhodesian whites stuck it out for so long principally because all they own is in the country, and Ian Smith's government, anxious that its white manpower resources should not erode, allowed departing Rhodesians to take only $1,000 with them. Nevertheless, there was a genuine sense of shared sacrifice and beleaguered unity amongst the whites even as late as 1979.

That is all gone now, or at least fading rapidly. The 14-year drama is over, and without it upper lips are losing some of their stiffness. The ultimate sacrilege occurred in late March, when representatives of Prime Minister-elect Robert Mugabe, conservatively dressed in three-piece suits, showed up at Combined Operations headquarters in Milton Building, the holy of holies of the white "nation in arms."

Now the Rhodesian whites have begun the long descent back into the petty complaining and self-centred isolation of the mere expatriate. Once unthinkable behaviour is to be seen in Salisbury, like a senior Special Branch officer blurting out drunken criticisms of his superiors in a crowded bar. Not only is the morale of whites collapsing, but also their fragile new national identity. And it is not hard to understand why.

The optimists believe, probably correctly, that the new Zimbabwe will continue to need many of them for years to come. They think that Prime Minister Mugabe is an intelligent enough man to avoid driving them out prematurely through a too-rapid "Africanization" that would wreck the economy. But they know that it is no longer their country, and that in the long run there will be little place for them in it.

THE LEVEL of ignorance about the character and intentions of Mugabe and his associates, among blacks as well as whites in Salisbury, is absolutely astonishing. The average conversation about the future consists of one known fact or quote from Mugabe, on which is erected an intricate structure of mere speculation about his plans.

Mugabe has severely curbed his Marxist rhetoric since he won the election, and most Rhodesian whites now plan to stay around for at least one or two years, to see what kind of state the new Zimbabwe turns out to be. Barring some violent political upheaval in the country, there is no longer likely to be a massive white exodus.

Rather, the white Rhodesians will drain away slowly over the next 10 years, as their lands or jobs are gradually handed over to Africans. And in the end there will probably be very few white Rhodesians left, though there may be many other white "experts" in the country on a contract basis.

For that majority of white Rhodesians who cannot or do not want to go to South Africa, the future has become their enemy. The heroic days of defying the world and running a country are past, and the future holds only a return to the cramped lower-middle-class British society most of them originally escaped from: back to Wimbledon and washing up.

TEN YEARS AGO this month, Willy Brandt, then West German chancellor, went to East Germany and shook hands with its prime minister, Willi Stoph, on a station platform at the yellow-brick railroad terminal in the city of Erfurt.

It was a symbolic meeting, suggesting the onset of detente that had been in the making since the mid 60s. West Germany was planting the seeds of a foreign policy that eventually were to branch East, through Berlin's Wall to the gates of the Kremlin and then back across Poland's rivers to East Germany, leading to the December 1972 basic treaty between the two Germanys.

Today, Bonn's Eastern policy — or Ostpolitik — is firmly rooted in West German politics, having sprouted a forest of commercial and diplomatic links with the Communist half of Europe.

But that development now poses a challenge to West Germany, particularly in the light of renewed East-West tensions, and carries significant consequences for the strength of the entire Western alliance. The challenge is how to mesh what Bonn calls its "special relationship" to the East with its bonded loyalty to the West.

What originally was an effort to bring the two Germanys closer together — if not politically, then at least commercially and culturally — has also, in effect, established a leading role for West Germany in the middle of Europe and provided Bonn with room for its own diplomatic manoeuvring.

Before the Soviet invasion of Afghanistan, Bonn could always deal with the Kremlin and its allies while remaining staunchly pro-American. Moscow, in turn, sought to encourage Bonn's manoeuvres in an effort to weaken its ties with the United States.

West German officials recognize they will not be able to carry on business-as-usual with the East bloc in the context of the current superpower chill. Their own Eastern policy can work, they say, only under the umbrella of superpower detente.

But the assumption that a full-scale freeze in Washington-Moscow relations will be avoided, West Germany continues anxiously to look for manoeuvring room toward the East.

THE AFGHAN crisis has contributed a tone of urgency to the relationship. In his State of the Union message this month, which dealt largely with a review of Ostpolitik, Chancellor Helmut Schmidt called on East German head of state and Communist-Party chief Erich Honecker to meet him "as soon as possible" in order to avoid a "confrontation on German soil" resulting from what he called a dangerous world situation.

A planned meeting between the two German leaders had to be postponed earlier this year because of the worsening of relations between Moscow and Washington. It was to be the first such high-level meeting between German leaders in a decade.

While making overtures to the East, Bonn has given repeated assurances to the West of its reliability and loyalty to the Atlantic alliance. This allegiance has never been seriously doubted by Western officials.

Indeed, while Bonn has portrayed itself as a protagonist of detente, it has also built up its military defence forces to the point where, among NATO members, its conventional strength is second only to that of the United States.

Western diplomats and German opposition leaders worry, however, that Bonn's closer relationship with the East has left it open to political blackmail. It has been rumoured in the press here, for instance, that East Germany may offer to reduce the age of citizens allowed to travel West — a concession long sought by Bonn — in return for West German participation in the Moscow Olympics.

Such an offer would likely tempt the West German government, although Bonn officials say they will resist any effort to drive a wedge between themselves and their Western partners.

BEYOND COMPLICATING Bonn's relations with the West, Ostpolitik raises another worry among West Germans — that it has not gone far enough in opening up to the East, has fallen short of high expectations and may have exhausted its original character.

Sometime around the mid-1970s, the early glow went out of Ostpolitik for most West Germans. Until that time, a distinct majority preferred a policy of equal collaboration with the two superpowers. Since then, a solid majority soured on the Soviets and today take a stronger pro-Western stance, according to a recent report by West Germany's Allensbach Institute, a leading political organization.

This shift in public opinion coincides with a more sober assessment by West German businessmen of the possibilities for trade with the East. The golden days when East-West trade increased by two-digit percentages annually — it grew a spectacular 350 per cent alone from 1971 to 1975 — have given way to a period of belt-tightening in the East that is squeezing out much of the former dynamism.

Schmidt himself, while citing gains in trade and closer contact with the East over the past 10 years, said in his speech that it is still impossible to speak of good, or even normal, relations between West and East Germany. Essential freedoms continue to be denied to East Germans, he said, and "As long as there is a wall and as long as there is violence on the border across Germany, we cannot say we are satisfied."

A question of balance

By BRADLEY GRAHAM / Bonn

WHEN BONN launched its Eastern policy, it never accepted the existence of two German nations. Because of that, the policy has carried a built-in instability from the start.

West Germany did recognize East Germany as a separate state, but within a single German nation. It refused — and still refuses — to acknowledge East Germany as a foreign country. West Germany remains committed by its constitution to press for reunification.

Between West Germany and Poland, tensions also linger. Bonn recognized Poland's long-disputed Western boundary along the Oder and Neisse Rivers. But West German law still lays claim to Germany's 1937 national boundaries, which include territory that is now part of Poland.

These fundamental disputes were conveniently submerged in the rush to normalize relations. The original programme for Ostpolitik called for a series of "small steps" between Bonn and Eastern Europe, involving mostly ways of facilitating trade and human contact. The question today is whether there are many more substantial small steps left to be taken before the old disputes become major irritations once again.

"The Germans are coming to the raw nerve, to the built-in conflict;" said an American diplomat experienced in German affairs. "They are approaching a point where perhaps more major steps aren't possible."

THIS MATTER is a delicate one. Politically so, because Schmidt's Social Democratic Party launched Ostpolitik and will be defending its national elections this autumn against opposition party claims that the government has not bargained hard enough with the Soviet bloc and entertained illusions about what Ostpolitik could achieve.

West Germans themselves appear genuinely confused about the sort of relations they want with the East, given the price of political concession that goes along.

Recent polls reflect a curious dichotomy: On the one hand, roughly two-thirds regarded the invasion of Afghanistan as a sign that something went wrong with detente; on the other, about two-thirds say they do not want to see Ostpolitik abandoned.

The seeming inconsistency reflects a basic conflict: Most West Germans do not trust the Soviets, but nevertheless want to keep negotiating for the sake of peace and stability in Central Europe.

Senior Bonn officials say privately they have dismissed the possibility of further significant developments in relations with the East for perhaps the next several years. Instead, they appear preoccupied, along with their Eastern European counterparts, with saving what has been achieved.

'The Germans are coming to the raw nerve...They are approaching a point where perhaps more major steps aren't possible.'

The list from Bonn's view is substantial:

- Trade: West German exports to Warsaw Pact countries tripled during the past decade, reaching $7.7 billion in 1979. Almost one-fourth of the organization of economic cooperation and development deliveries to the Soviet bloc now come from West Germany. Meanwhile, West German trade with East Germany, which Bonn counts separately, about tripled since 1970 and is expected to pass $5.6 billion.
- Repatriation: The 1975 Helsinki accord is regarded in Bonn as a spectacular outgrowth of Ostpolitik. In the spirit of the agreement, roughly 250,000 ethnic Germans have been repatriated from the Soviet Union and Eastern Europe in the last five years, according to the West German government.
- Contact: Eight million trips were made by West Germans and West Berliner's last year to relatives and friends in East Germany. In 1970, only a small number of West Germans were able to visit the East and were often subjected to delays and arbitrary searches by East German border guards. Moreover, some 50,000 phone calls are put through daily now between Germans, East and West. In 1970, no phone service existed even between the two halves of Berlin.
- Berlin: Once the ultimate symbol of the Cold War, West Berlin has adjusted to become as normal a city as is possible given its amputated position in East Germany and its walled border. Lately, in fact, the city has been enjoying a renaissance, marked by increased business investment, including such new U.S. arrivals as Philip Morris, Gillette and Ford Motor Co. Significantly, too, during the Afghan crisis, Berlin has remained exceptionally quiet, with the Soviets and Western powers all seemingly intent on avoiding an incident.
- Peace. Although this is difficult to quantify, a general relaxation in Central and Eastern Europe is clearly evident.

"It became especially clear in the last few months," said Egon Bahr, one of the architects of Ostpolitik and business manager of the Social Democratic Party, "that there has grown a way of thinking and feeling in Europe East and West that realizes a common interest in maintaining the results of the last 10 years and not to endanger them."

BUT WHILE tensions have eased and relations improved, the expectation that Ostpolitik would inaugurate an era of friendly cooperation between Bonn and its Eastern neighbours has not been fulfilled.

The Berlin wall remains; East Germans, with the exception primarily of aged pensioners, are still prohibited from travelling to the West; individual freedoms within the Soviet bloc remain sharply curbed.

The process of negotiating detailed projects to fulfil the spirit of the original treaties has proved hard going.

"This is very strenuous business," said Egon Franke, Minister of Inter-German Affairs. "One looks for things to talk about, sounding out the other side on whether it might be possible to come up with an agreement on something. We have achieved results that could not have been thought about before. But as soon as a political or ideological issue is raised, there is not much we can do."

The talks go slowly, Franke said, because the East is wary of developing too strong a relationship. "They are very intent on developing their own world," he said.

Besides, Moscow keeps a close eye on the negotiations. It has already lost some control, within still narrow bounds, over its Warsaw Pact partners.

Bonn officials are optimistic that Eastern Europe's desire for further trade, credit, contact and peaceful relations will keep Ostpolitik alive. The policy here as well has developed a certain momentum of its own, with powerful business and political groups in West Germany having vested interests in keeping it going.

"We have reached a plateau, this is true, in the bilateral sense," said Social Democratic strategist Bahr. "The logical and political next step is in the military field. But this move must be multi-lateral."

Opposition leaders warn the government that in pursuit of Ostpolitik it should stay in step with the United States. "The Soviet intention has always been to produce a reaction in West Germany that says we are in a special position," said Richard von Weizsaecker, a Christian Democrat and vice-president of the Lower House of Parliament. "The more we approach this, the more we do what the Soviets want us to do."

"My main concern is that West Germany should invite the United States to make a common assessment of the situation and to go on with detente together. The alternative leads to a regional detente. But there is no possibility of a special German detente, only of a detente in the alliance."

An end to television politics

Prime Minister Begin should 'play down' the offer by President Sadat to again address the Knesset, writes MOSHE SHARON.

PRESIDENT Anwar Sadat is always welcome in Israel, particularly in the capital. Well-informed about the ways of real democracy, where freedom of speech and ideas are the most sacred articles of faith, he knows he will have not only a warm reception from our over-enthusiastic public but also free access to every form of the local and Free World media.

This knowledge — and the positive outcome of his previous visits — must have been behind his recent declaration that he wants to have a second go at the Knesset.

He wants, he says, to explain Egypt's ideas on autonomy to the Israeli public and its elected representatives.

Sadat is welcome, but the Knesset rostrum is not Egypt's television studio. Not even if Sadat invites Premier Menahem Begin to address the Egyptian People's Council. And not even if Begin is yearning to enjoy that privilege which he has until now been so masterfully denied by Egypt, although he should have had it if there is, indeed, reciprocity in Israeli-Egyptian relations.

The reason Begin has not addressed the Egyptian parliament is that he has had nothing to say to it, whereas Sadat has always had a lot to say to the Israeli public. What is meant by this is not that Begin has no message to deliver. He has, and there is no need to add that he has the skill and the eloquence to deliver it adequately.

In Egypt, however, Begin will have no press, no listeners. At best, he may have polite attention. But he should not delude himself that he would have even one sympathizer in the assembly or one friend in the state-directed media. Which amounts to saying that Begin has nothing to say to Egypt.

Nor should Begin forget that for the Arabs and Moslems — Egyptians included — he was, is and always will be the Jew — or, in Moslem legal terminology, the dhimmi.

The Islamic legal system as developed and practised for over 1,300 years in the Islamic Empire, has clearly defined the status of the dhimmi, the non-Moslem (mainly the Jew and the Christian).

The core of this definition is that a dhimmi can never be equal to an Arab-Moslem. Stemming from what is regarded as the words of the Almighty in the Koran, the inferior status of the dhimmi in the eyes of the Moslem is eternal.

SADAT HIMSELF, through what came to be known as the "peace initiative," seems to have broken the sacred law of the dhimmi's inferiority. He has, after all, spoken many times about the humiliation and degradation to which the Jews are destined.

Neither the Egyptian president nor any other Moslem can feel differently, and this is why the peace treaty with Egypt is so hard to digest by most, if not all, the Islamic world.

For, superficially at least, a Moslem state appears to have made the first step towards accepting the reversibility of Islamic history. This reversibility means that a certain territory, which had been conquered through a holy war, jihad, in the past, may be regained by the non-Moslems.

In the course of classical Islamic history, such a process has occurred. Spain was lost to its former Christian (dhimmi) people, as were substantial territories in Europe which had been conquered by the Ottomans. But these lands constituted the periphery of the House of Islam (Dar al-Islam). The State of Israel, however, grew on what is regarded the heart of the Arab lands.

Acquired by jihad and moulded into Islam through a long process of Arabization and Islamization during which the former peoples and cultures which had grown in Syria and Palestine were reduced to an inferior position, the fate of these territories was deemed to be sealed forever.

The fact that a dhimmi people sought to re-establish, emphasizing its pre-Islamic heritage, an independent political entity on these territories, is in itself an insult to Islamic superiority; the fact that it was accomplished by force is a humiliation, which cannot be forgiven. But the fact that an Arab-Islamic ruler is ready to legalize the reversibility of the achievement of jihad cannot be anything but a blasphemy, unless the political manoeuvres can be explained as part of a grand scheme and as an overall strategy.

This must be the only way Sadat can justify his policies to his fellow Egyptians. And even then it is hardly possible that he can persuade all those who belong to the hard-core of the Islamic society.

IT IS against this background that Sadat's offer to again appear before the Knesset should be seen. When he addressed the Knesset in November 1977, he said that there could be no relinquishing of Arab lands. This has been understood to mean the territories captured in June 1967.

For people who are not accustomed to the terminology used in the Islamic Arab political dictionary and who hear what they want to hear, this might seem to be the meaning of the term.

Arab lands, however, has nothing to do with 1967; the reversibility of jihad began in 1948, and every piece of territory which returned to the possession of the non-Moslem, non-Arabs, nevertheless remains Arab territory.

Egypt, under the brilliant guidance of Sadat, has embarked on a strategy of political moves to halt the reversible process, which takes full advantage of the modern communications. Sadat discovered the power of television and the press in the political war which he has been so cleverly conducting against Israel.

For his grand show, he needs the whole world as an audience, and he discovered that nothing can beat an appearance in the Knesset.

First, the MKs participate in the live recording — and no performer can ask for a more docile, friendly and cooperative audience: cheers and well-timed applause are guaranteed. Sadat can say anything he likes; he can be sure to have at least 30 per cent of the listeners fully behind him and another 40 per cent, if not more, sympathetic to him.

But the audience in the Knesset is only a minor factor. Sadat needs the world.

The Knesset members provide an excellent backdrop, but the message has to reach millions of viewers.

His first appearance in 1977 proved to be a great success. Millions saw him and he spoke in such a way that his listeners could make what they wished to of his address.

Sadat understands well the power of the media, and if he is allowed to pursue his TV politics he may be able to push Israel's lost "leadership" even deeper into a corner.

Because of this, his suggestion to address the Knesset again should be ignored. Moreover, an end should be put to TV politics.

UNFORTUNATELY we must also deal with an Israeli political leadership which loves the cameras. And one can hardly see the Israeli premier resisting an invitation to address the Egyptian parliament. What message will Begin bring with him which would arouse even the faintest sympathy in the Egyptian parliament? Egyptian MPs, after all, expect nothing less than Israel's unconditional acceptance of Sadat's terms.

LOVE LETTER TO ISRAEL

On his flight back to London, GILES GORDON writes an appreciation following a visit to 'your ravishing country.'

IS IT POSSIBLE for a goy — and one hailing from Scotland — to write a love letter to Israel, without seeming presumptuous?

Some of my best friends are Jewish, but it wasn't until I paid my first visit to Jerusalem a couple of weeks ago that my very Scottish name of Gordon was transposed to Golden, although there are quite a few Gordons in the city. I was quietly flattered as I might not have been a month before.

I write fiction, plays and poetry — not non-fiction — and that may (although I don't see why it should) excuse my previous lack of particular interest in and detailed knowledge of Israel. Working part of the time with other authors and publishers as a literary agent, it has always seemed to me that many of the most perceptive and talented of them — in Britain and the U.S. — are Jewish.

I have always felt there is something different — special — about these people as individuals, different from other nationals of their countries, or of any other country. I have sometimes been vaguely surprised that they haven't spoken more of Israel. But why should they, to me, a Gentile who has evinced no special interest in the matter?

It took my first visit to your ravishing country last month — it won't be my last — to hear the sentiment expressed that no Jew is fully and properly a Jew unless he is also an Israeli, a view I would have found perplexing — indeed, chauvinistic and banal — before I visited your State.

The person who made the statement went on to say that if a Jew lives and works in, for instance, Britain or the U.S., he is by definition first and foremost a national of that country; and given a moment's reflection this must be seen to be the case.

He continued, less philosophically, to say that sending Israel money might salve the conscience of the British or American Jew and help the country, but it doesn't settle matters with history, either his own or that of his race. He also felt that without a greater understanding of the State of Israel, of the state of the State of Israel, by intelligent but not particularly informed people around the world, the country would be unlikely to see the next century.

I'M WRITING these words on my El Al flight from Ben-Gurion Airport to Heathrow (why so often does lunch have to be chicken?) and am persuaded to do so as a result of reading Moshe Sharon's opinion piece ("No shame in 'rights' ") in your issue of April 4.

What we don't sufficiently hear in Britain — either through the media or from individuals, friends — is your right to be in Israel as it is the right of other races and nationals to live in their countries; that, conversely, you have no unassailable right to live and work anywhere else. Of course security is important, even more important I would have thought than Mr. Sharon implies, for what worth is a birthright if it cannot be implemented or defended?

I spent most of my month in Israel at Malkia, a kibbutz in Upper Galilee, to which I had been invited — the visit being sponsored by Friends of Israel in London who are sending a number of British writers to your country this year — to live, both to work on the kibbutz and earn my keep, and to write (though I realize this implies that writing isn't work, which naturally it is) for as long as I chose to stay or was able, given that my wife and three children remained in Britain.

Malkia is on the border with Lebanon. I still haven't grown used to the sullen scribbles of barbed wire between the kibbutz and the delectable country across the road — the same delectable country, except on the map, as is Upper Galilee. I still haven't grown used to those well-featured, strong charactered young men and gentle, elegant young women eating meals in the dining hall with their weapons beside them. They obviously weren't mostly in the army by choice, yet their commitment to life at the present and to their futures didn't seem impaired. To a man and to a woman, their eyes shone. They relished every moment that was theirs. Today was today, whatever tomorrow might become. I am not being sentimental, only observant.

I attended the Malkia seder. There was little, if anything, overtly religious about it. Chicken again, roasted dry-as-dust, and your sweet red wine unpleasant to my palate were of course the menu of the day with, if I wasn't mistaken, tinned fruit salad. (The meals during the normal working week were another matter.)

I was moved and elated and saddened and humbled by the unself-conscious and spontaneous ceremony, your response to an event that encompasses a celebration of, that almost is, your history. The very young participated, and the very old.

I SEEM to have spent my time in Israel being moved. I am moved, you extraordinary people, by the way you enjoy yourselves and with such natural dignity, the way you appreciate — without ostentation, without smugness — your country, the country you happened to be absent from for 2,000 years.

Your contribution to the history of the world, to culture and the arts, to scholarship and to medicine is fundamental and essential, both to you and to us, to those of us who aren't you. It hardly needs a visitor to Israel to inform you of that.

What it does require is for me to confess, as an ordinary but in this respect perhaps typical British citizen, that I never fully saw the point and purpose of Israel, the necessity of your State, until I visited you and, for four weeks, partook of your country, grew to know and become fond of some of you.

You all (well, most of you) seem to work so hard, such long hours — you take it for granted — and are much more content doing so than the increasingly leisure-laden rest of Europe. You welcome visitors, not being particularly concerned whether they are Jewish. You answer our questions with frankness, interested that we should be interested. Your Peace Now movement is the latest credit to your sensibilities and self-respect: don't let your present government ruin what has been achieved. How are you able to be so optimistic, given what you've been through down the centuries? The answer is seen in your lives. It is because of what you have been through.

Those of us who are not Jewish or Israeli have our own problems (membership of the European Economic Community being one to some of your fellow Europeans). We do not want to read in our newspapers every day how you are scrapping, both internally and internationally, about defence and security. You are a country, a nation, a people. As a nation which historically (yes, I know about the Mandate) takes much pride in its country, the British can only respond well if you constantly assert your rights of nationhood. For they are rights.

A PEOPLE cannot exist for too long without its country. You have been pushed way beyond what should have been the limits. Now you have your country again. You must ensure that those who are not Israelis understand why you have it, why you are able to call your country Israel, yourselves Israelis.

I suppose it is to your credit that you allow the new Germans to visit you in such numbers, but I confess to being bewildered by that, and even more so that they should want to see the country of the people some of their forefathers failed to rub out. Your ability to forgive, or be seen to forgive, is remarkable, an object lesson to us all. It may or may not prove to be a weakness. Pray God it does not.

Yours is the most international country in the world. It cannot fail to be. It must continue to be. You must ensure that we all understand.

The author, formerly editorial director of Victor Gollancz, is now dividing his time between being a literary agent and doing his own writing. His sixth novel, "Ambrose's Vision," is to be published in June.

Myths and bogeymen

The time has come for Israel to face some of the facts about the drop-out of Jewish emigrants from the Soviet Union, says JESSE ZEL LURIE.

FOR FIVE OR SIX years the problem of neshira — the Soviet Jews who leave Russia with Israeli visas but drop out in Vienna — has been near the top of the Jewish agenda. Joint committees of Israeli and American Jewish leaders have discussed at length at scores of meetings what, if anything, can be done and have reached no conclusions. Scientific studies were commissioned by the Jewish Agency. The findings were published and forgotten. Congressional friends of Israel helped to pass new regulations which, they were told, might improve Israel's relations with the noshrim. Just the opposite happened. The Jewish Agency and the Israel press attacked the new law as unfriendly to Israel.

After so many years of chewing over neshira, isn't it time to spit out the myths and bogeymen and stick to facts?

FIRST FACT. It costs the American taxpayer $200 a month to support a Soviet drop-out in Rome. Aid to the drop-outs is not generous: it is based more or less on American welfare standards although admittedly a welfare recipient in New York City gets more.

The $200 per person per month is paid to the Joint Distribution Committee, under contract, by the Refugee Administration in Washington. The government pays only for basic needs. It does not reimburse the Joint for administration costs, educational courses, cultural activities, or kosher food for those who want it. These items, which amount to less than 10 per cent of the Joint's budget, are covered by the Joint's own funds, which come from the United Jewish Appeal (UJA).

When I visited the noshrim in Rome a couple of years ago, the average idling time in Rome waiting for an American (or Canadian or Australian) visa was three to six months. In order to save the cost of supporting the Jews in Rome, the American authorities have speeded up the processing of visas to one month or less.

There is no reason to credit HIAS with this increased efficiency, although HIAS has in fact improved its own processing, which consists of contacting relatives in the U.S. and finding an American Jewish community willing to accept and absorb the Russian family.

SECOND FACT. HIAS is an organ of and financially controlled by the American Jewish community. Except for what it receives on contract from the U.S. Refugee Administration, its budget comes from allocations by Federation and Welfare Funds in each city. It places Soviet Jews in American cities through the local Federation or a subsidiary thereof.

HIAS is a respected organ of the American Jewish community. At a dinner celebrating its centennial on March 26 (not reported in the Israel press), a warm message was received from Premier Menahem Begin. The guests of honour were Max Fisher, a top American Jewish leader, and Stuart Eizenstat, President Carter's assistant for domestic affairs.

HIAS helps Soviet Jews because American Jewry wants it to. To attack it as "a bogeyman" is like a matador trying to kill a bull by cutting off its tail.

Most American Jews stem from Eastern Europe. They are only two or three generations removed from the Russian Jews now in Rome. They love Israel, but they cannot, for Israel's sake, deny their Russian cousins the opportunity that their families had of making it in the goldene medine.

Still, some communities have in recent months taken action which is, at least, a partial denial. They have informed HIAS that they will no longer accept Russian Jews who do not have first-degree relatives in their communities.

Whether or not these actions will reduce neshira is problematic. The refugee agency in New York City, is among those who are continuing to take all comers. New York City's stand is crucial, because it has absorbed about half of the Soviet Jewish immigration.

How then can neshira be reduced? Some American Zionist leaders have suggested that the Rome transit station be transferred to Israel. If only they could see Israel, if only they could breathe the air of Eretz Yisrael, many would decide to make their homes in the Jewish state.

Until now, American regulations made this impossible. A Soviet Jew who set foot in Israel lost his refugee status. I remember one young Soviet Jew in Rome telling me: "I would like to see Israel, but I won't give up my opportunity of going to America."

THIRD FACT. Friends of Israel in the U.S. Congress headed by Elizabeth Holtzman of Bro... have pushed through a cha... the law. A Soviet Jew ca... make use of his Israeli visa ... losing his refugee status ... limited time after arriving in ... he can still opt for immigra... the U.S. with the help of all ... ficial bodies.

IS THERE NOTHING, then, ... can be done about the ever-... neshira? I believe there is.

ADVERTISING IN THE JERUSALEM POST GETS RESULTS

DUN & BRADSTREET (ISRAEL) LTD דן אנד ברדסטריט (ישראל) בע"מ

March 9, 1980

Mr. Fred Rapheli
Manager
Jerusalem Post
11 Carlibach
Tel Aviv

Dear Mr. Rapheli,

During February 1980 Dun & Bradstreet ran a series of medium-size display ads in the "Money Matters" section of the week-day Jerusalem Post referring to our services in Israel in the field of business information, market research and business studies.

I thought you would be interested to know that, through this advertising, we have received a number of inquiries and letters from commercial and industrial firms in Egypt who are interested in our services to help them establish business ties with Israeli companies.

Thanks to your excellent service in making the Jerusalem Post available in Egypt every day, your paper is not only read in that country, but also its advertising receives serious attention.

I am personally most pleased with the results as well as with this opportunity to expand our services to our neighbors in Egypt. This is not only good business but a contribution to the mutual interests of peace and economic development in our region.

Sincerely,

Marc Gueron
General Manager

UNSOLICITED TESTIMONIAL

READERS' LETTERS

THE IMPORTANCE OF THE OVERSEAS PRIMARY

To the Editor of The Jerusalem Post

Sir, — There appears to be some confusion about the 'overseas primary being held by the U.S. Democratic Party. (The Republicans are not holding an overseas primary.) The confusion is the result of the fact that Americans living abroad (including students and retired people) can vote in their state primary (the state in which they last voted), or they can vote in the primary for Democrats resident abroad — a postal ballot primary.

The overseas primary will be the first presidential preference primary ever held outside the U.S. and it will elect four delegates and three alternate delegates to the convention in New York in August.

Besides the obvious choice of candidate, the delegates from Democrats Abroad can, in a close convention, play a major role and have a voice in Democratic Party policy — foreign and domestic.

Also, American citizens still remain the only citizens in the world who are taxed by their home country on foreign-earned income. The two million Americans living abroad must begin to make their objection known.

Further, the U.S. finds itself in the position of taxing its citizens abroad without providing them with a voice in Congress to argue the point, or any point, regulation, bill or act that directly affects them. Ironically, "no taxation without representation" is as valid a cry against mother America in 1980 as it was against mother Britain in 1776.

Also, if Americans pay taxes at home, they should receive benefits. What is coming back to Americans abroad for taxes paid?

These and many other issues are or should be the primary concern of the Democrats Abroad delegation. Also, as we live in foreign countries, who better than us can let them know what we think of their (our) foreign policy — or lack of it?

I hope there is a great turn out for the overseas primary. Every delegate counts.

THOMAS COULON, Chairperson, Kennedy for President Committee (UK)
London.

POISONING THE LAND

To the Editor of The Jerusalem Post

Sir, — What a horrible country this has become! The picture you showed on March 28 of a helicopter dusting corn fields with chemicals designed to destroy crops has finally destroyed all hopes I had of this government behaving in a rational or ethical manner.

Our land, which many of us consider holy, is being poisoned while officials of the Israel Lands Administration look on. Do the Kiryat Arba settlers and those others who regard Jewish settlement in Hebron as a duty agree with the poisoning of soil south of this holy city?

As an Israeli and as a human being, I love our land and it hurts to see our fertile soil so wickedly poisoned.

DEMOCRATIC PARTY IN ISRAEL

To the Editor of The Jerusalem Post

Sir, — Because of what I considered unfair decisions by the Carter-supporting Chairman of the Democratic Party in Israel (decisions which complicated immeasurably the enrolment of Kennedy supporters in Israel) and particularly because of President Carter's egregious betrayal of this country at the UN, I decided to travel to Israel to help enrol Democrats supporting Senator Kennedy in the Democratic presidential race. The week I spent here was one of the most extraordinary times of my life.

Carter's UN vote, Brzezinski's and Young's ties with the PLO and Carter's sale of 6,000 missiles and 60 F-15s to the Saudis last December are, to most Americans, merely factors in the issues equation. After spending time among both Americans living here and Israeli citizens, I realize more than ever that these specific issues are, quite precisely, matters of life and death. I will never be cavalier about matters affecting Israel's security. Nor will I forgive American politicians — be they presidents or congressmen — who look upon the Israeli lever as just another to pull on occasic... nothing more.

ABRASIVE AD

To the Editor of The Jerusalem Post

Sir, — The advertisement for "German health resorts for fun and relaxation" (April 13) coming as it does the morning after the eve of the memorial for the 6 million Jews who died at the hands of the Nazis, appears rather insensitive.

Perhaps an advertisement as this another day and in the paper would have been abrasive and perhaps reminiscent?

Every now and then, the authority commissions a survey of the listening preferences of viewers, and reports with great self-satisfaction that 92 per cent watch this programme, 80 per cent watch that, and so on. They should conduct a survey to find out, not only what people think of what is provided, but how many are satisfied with the nature of wares Israel supplies, how many watch foreign channels and how many would like to see other programmes on the air.

TERRIBLE WARNINGS are issued from time to time about the danger of Israelis raising their living standards — the ultimate crime — through the introduction of a second channel, or the broadcasting of all programmes in colour.

With due respect, it seems to me that erecting higher and higher antennae in order to pick up the fare so thoughtfully provided by the Arabs elevates living costs and standards, as well as aerials.

Incidentally, I would also like "Kolbotek" to investigate why some programmes are now deemed worthy of colour, while others are not. Who decides? Does Brazilian music in colour cost more than such music bleached? Is it less calculated to stimulate an orgy of colour television purchases than would a colour telecast of "Affairs of the Heart?" What is the system of selection? How is it motivated? What does it cost the public?

SOMEBODY once predicted that when the British pulled out of India, all they would leave behind would be a used contraceptive condom and an empty whisky bottle. I am fully convinced that Israeli sovereignty over the Holy Land will never come to an end — at least, over that portion of it within the "Green Line." But I very much fear that what archaeologists will find here in a couple of millennia will reflect a very poor contribution to civilization.

"Kolbotek" has revealed how we are defacing the rooftops with broken television aerials and smashed solar-heating devices. It also showed us this week how vandals are treating the Atlit camp, the historic site where the British imprisoned thousands of so-called "illegal" immigrants.

And the weekend magazine reported on the way ugly Israeli locusts ravaged the Red Sea coast, under the proud slogan of, "What do I care? We are going to give it back anyway to the Egyptians, let us lay it all waste."

I would be more convinced of the genuineness of this argument — even though I do not approve of it — if I had not seen how Israelis have already devastated the beaches from Rosh Hanikra all the way to Ashkelon, a strip that nobody except the extremists in the PLO has suggested should be taken away from Israel.

During the recent holidays, I camped at a site on the Red Sea coast — I will not reveal the name lest the obliterating horde descends on it — before the invasion of the area by 150,000 Israelis began.

The site was so beautiful that for a mad moment I thought to do a trade with the Arabs — chunks of West Bank for chunks of Red Sea coastline. After seeing on the news magazine what the Israelis did, the offer is withdrawn.

Their attitude to such sites is reminiscent of Gibbon's description of the barbarians looking down on imperial Rome, and saying, "Oh, what a beautiful city to plunder!"

No, the more I think of it, the less qualified we appear to be to remain sovereign over beauty. Dr. Walter Clay Lowdermilk, that great non-Jewish Zionist, used to justify his championship of our cause on the grounds that we obeyed his 11th commandment — of being faithful stewards of the good earth. What we saw hardly justifies this claim.

"SECOND LOOK" was devoted to a reassessment of non-Jewish Scandinavian volunteers who spend the summer working on kibbutzim. Israel is the land of supreme ironies: it was perhaps inevitable that we should now be reviewing the enthusiasm with which we once welcomed the volunteers.

This dislike of the strangor is not confined to the narrow-minded religious-chavinist bigots, afraid that the volunteers will carry off Jewish boys and girls through intermarriage; the doubts were expressed by veteran members of a kibbutz.

I must qualify what I am writing by noting that the investigation was confined to one kibbutz. Not all kibbutzim are the same, and I would have liked to get the reactions of many kibbutzim before accepting that there is a strong trend against accepting volunteers.

The objections were based on the fact that the volunteers — most of those we saw came from Scandinavia and Holland — are bringing the impressionable kibbutz youth into contact with modern European culture, and on fears that the labour of these volunteers is undermining the principle of self-labour.

Neither dilemma is new to kibbutzim. As far as contacts with alien cultures is concerned, it is hard to see how the youth can be insulated against the challenge: the moment the youngsters go anywhere in Israel, they inevitably encounter that strange and perhaps evil kind of dancing, love-making, pleasure-seeking.

Whether it is wicked to have oranges and other crops garnered in return for providing bed and board for travellers is a moral issue the kibbutzim will have to decide for themselves — a superficial impression is that they are doing a great service for Israel, making us thousands of friends, when everyone else is doing so much to antagonize the entire world. This gain seems to merit the sacrifice of letting strangers help to gather in the harvest.

WHEN "Meeting for Two,' began on Sunday night, I made myself comfortable in my armchair, prepared for half an hour of detesting Yigal Tumarkin for his arrogance and self-satisfaction. (I have long had a grievance against the man because of an awful sculpture he put at the top of the garden in the Afridar neighbourhood of Ashkelon.)

But Adam Baruch, who interviewed him, was so utterly impossible, so aggressive, so vicious, so everything an interviewer should not be that I rapidly became an ardent Tumarkin fan. Baruch seems to think that the way to interview a sculptor is to conduct an interrogation in accordance with the methods of some sinister secret police force.

There are, indeed, two ways of interviewing. One is to handle the subject in such a way as to bring out his personality and views, the other is to trample over him in order to prove what a very clever fellow the interviewer is.

Since "Meeting for Two" selects interesting and well-known personalities as subjects, it would seem to me that the first method should be used. But I may be wrong. After all, Mike Wallace did very well with the brutal system, and I must admit that the adrenalin released by Baruch's technique kept me very wide awake.

All I can say is that from now on I will look with a kindlier eye on Tumarkin's creations.

TUESDAY'S "Visiting Card," the first of four programmes about the soldiers of 1980, introduced us to Sheri, a delightful sub-lieutenant spreading happiness among male soldiers, some of them twice her age. She explained how interesting it was to meet Israelis of all types, from all walks of life.

The only flaw in the programme was that she smoked innumerable cigarettes, holding her cigarettes casually in shapely fingers like an advertising model. As the programme appeared on a day dedicated to non-smoking, her gestures were unfortunate. And it is sad to think of so charming a girl ravaging her lungs like an Israeli let loose on the Red Sea coastline.

THE anti-accident campaign one night showed us drivers of a bus, a taxi and a learner's car, all committing half-a-dozen offences an hour, without being aware of their wrongs.

But the programme appeared to me to have one great weakness: The main offence these drivers committed was wandering from lane to lane without signalling. They did so because slow-moving vehicles were hogging the centre of the road.

While driving slowly in the centre of the road may not technically be a misdemeanour, in practice it probably causes more accidents than the offences we saw committed. The team should go out and teach the slow drivers their proper place — on the right, not in the centre. The slow pest can be as much a menace as the maniacal speedster.

Janis Ian... "I don't think I ever led a 'wild life.'"

OFF THE RECORD

ENTERTAINMENT NOTES / Michal Yudelman

FIFTEEN years after child prodigy Janis Ian created a storm with her controversial song about the love affair between a white girl and a black boy, she is still remembered as the enfant terrible of American light music.

But sitting in a simple pants suit at the Tel Aviv Sheraton, the petite, 29-year-old Janis seems very far from the resentful teenager who insulted journalists and led, according to the press, a wild life of drugs and unconventional sex.

"I don't think I ever led a 'wild' life. I always liked being alone, playing my guitar and writing songs," says Janis, who arrived with a three-man band this week for six concerts in Israel, as the prelude to a world tour.

Janis, who became known here mainly for quiet, bitter, penetrating love songs like "Jesse," "At Seventeen," and "Between the Lines," began her career with folk songs, continued with soft rock and is now branching out into harder rock with jazz and blues influences.

Joan Baez, Roberta Flack and Judy Collins have "borrowed" Janis's songs, which she regards as a great compliment. When she was starting out, she had difficulty finding a company that would record her songs. Then "Jesse" was made famous by Roberta Flack, who recorded it on one of her albums, and suddenly doors started opening for Janis. This led to the recording of the hugely successful album, "Stars."

Today, many successful albums later, she is relaxed and confident, and has even made her peace with the press. "When I grew up, I found that the journalists were people my own age and we could discuss things together. They stopped trying to patronize me or trip me up all the time, as they used to when I was considered a child prodigy," she explains.

Having grown up in a Jewish family, Janis feels a strong affinity for Israel. Until recently, she recalls, she had no idea that she was popular here. She plans to see as much of the country as she can, and intends to drag her band to Jerusalem to see the Western Wall and then go on to Masada. And she wants to ride a camel.

Asked what songs she intends to sing in her concerts here, she promptly replies: "Every one I ever wrote." Her programme, comprising 22 numbers, includes pieces from almost all her albums.

While regarding it an honour to sing on Israel's Independence Day, Janis does not hide her nervousness. "I've heard the audience here is great: warm and supportive. But this is my first performance in a new programme; the band is all new. What if I forget the words? What if I make a fool of myself and my family will hate me forever? What if I fall in front of people I've been brought up to regard as my kin?"

For a moment she seems transparent and vulnerable, making one understand the secret of her forlorn songs: their power and magic derive directly from the blunt, uncompromising honesty of their creator.

THE PERSUASIONS have decided to stay in Tel Aviv for one more week, and will be performing at the Hilton Hotel's Coral Club until April 26. The five Black singers, who are also known as The Kings Of A Cappella for their unaccompanied vocal harmony, will appear nightly except Friday and this Saturday (the eve of memorial day) from 11 p.m. to midnight. Drinks are served during the performance, and disco music is provided before and after the show.

YEHORAM GAON will launch a new show on Independence Day, spanning all his golden hits from "Dina Barzilai" to "Rosa," including songs from his days with the Gesher Hayarkon and Hatarnegolim groups, and Ladino songs. Gaon will perform in large halls throughout the country.

BRITISH SOPRANO Felicity Palmer and Gregory Allen, first-prize winner of the Third Arthur Rubinstein Piano Master Competition, will be soloists in the Eve of Independence Day Concert on Sunday.

After studying at London's Guildhall School of Music and Munich's Academy of Music, Felicity Palmer distinguished herself by winning first prize in the "Kathleen Ferrier" singing competition in 1970.

Since then, she has achieved an international reputation. She is now appearing in Mozart's "Idomeneo" in Zurich and is scheduled to participate in "the Damnation of Faust" with the English National Opera.

Miss Palmer [illegible] the Jerusalem [illegible] under Gary Bertini she participated in Mozart's "Davidde Penitente" at the 1978 Israel Festival.

(The sole recital featuring Gundula Janowitz, which was to have taken place on Independence Day, has been cancelled).

The amplification of the harpsichord (Bart Berman) further distorted the sound as every note came over with a big bang and provided another solo instrument, only really justified in a few bars of harmonic elaborations, but not as continuo.

Mendelssohn's music was given in complete form, with all the little bits and pieces thrown in in a live performance of the Shakespeare play. Misha Asheroff read the story with great [illegible] …cially [illegible] by Avi[illegible] the Hebrew translation by T. Carmi," according to the programme notes. Whoever came to hear a concert was treated instead to lengthy poetry readings, occasionally interrupted by some music.

At least this part of the programme seemed well-rehearsed and got a balanced and tuneful performance. The two vocal numbers suffered from a chorus that was almost inaudible, but the Sinfonietta produced some nice playing.

CHAMBER MUSIC. The "Ariel" Ensemble: Robin Brightman, violin; Nancy Usher, viola; Nina Flyer, cello, and the Jerusalem String Trio: Rima Kaminkovsky, violin; Yuval Kaminkovsky, viola; Shmuel Magen, cello (YMCA Auditorium, April 13). Sextet No. 1 in B-flat Major, Tchaikovsky: "Souvenirs de Florence" opus 70, for String Sextet.

IT SEEMS commendable that young musicians band together to perform works of the world repertoire which are rarely heard publicly because of their peculiar or particular instrumental combinations.

A string sextet is hard to come by; usually it is formed out of a well-established string quartet with two additional musicians fitting their temperamental outlook. In this case, two groups joined forces without an established musical profile or a leader giving it his (or her) imprint. The result was less than desirable as the performances were technically most uneven, groping around without conception, missing leadership for tempi and interpretative expression. The [illegible] to give the f[illegible] [illegible] trio in turn did no[illegible] help [illegible]; it only accentuated the weakness of individual players. Occasional bright spots may point to the positive possibilities inherent in these young, enthusiastic and devoted players, but more than goodwill is required.

Exercise in integration

By ASHER WALLFISH
Jerusalem Post Reporter

...T SHIMONA will get its first development town group this ...mer, made up of army entrants ...the Israel Scout Movement, ...re currently completing their ...grade in high schools in ...lem, Haifa and the Greater ...ly area.

...bers of the Nahal group, ...numbers nearly 40, must sign ...n additional year of service, ...the men serve four years in- ...of the usual three, and the ...three, instead of the usual ...

...the "Oded" groups, made ...ibbutz youth, who volunteer ...ial and educational work in ...ment towns but do not ac- ...ern money, the new Nahal ...will encourage its members ...whatever jobs are going, and ...their living as best they can.

...meeting with group ...ers and their parents in ...lem, Zohar Gindel, ...ead of the Development Towns Guidance Centre, explained that the idea was to make the Nahal soldiers a part of the town's daily life, economically, socially and culturally, and not have the group "looking down from above," like "Oded" kibbutz volunteers.

After the Scout Movement organized four such groups in Ma'alot, the Guidance Centre stepped in to give official sponsorship, and the army authorities welcomed the idea of a group for Kiryat Shmona.

Whereas the women serve seven-and-a-half months of their three years on military duties, the men serve two years of their time on it, and are also on stand-by in the town for the rest of the time, to be called on in emergencies and general security rosters.

The group, which will continue registering members until the end of the high school year, expects its members to take part after working hours in social and civic activities in Kiryat Shmona. They can participate singly, or in groups, in activities ranging from mishmar ezrahi (civil guard), tutoring, youth counselling, scout activities and social welfare, to arts and crafts groups.

GINDEL told the parents: "While the group is in Kiryat Shmona, its members will study the possibility of settling there after army service. To judge by the experience in Ma'alot, some will probably settle. But even if not, they will have gained incomparable experience and learned how development town residents live."

Liron Frank, a counsellor for the Kiryat Shmona group who herself belongs to the second Ma'alot group, told the parents: "Nahal groups have their problems, but ours, in a development town, are not the same as those in a kibbutz. We have to make sure the members do an honest day's work and earn enough to keep themselves."

Every three or four members will be assigned an apartment, equipped with basic furniture and kitchen utensils. All wages, which will vary widely with the job, will go into a group account, from which each member will be paid a monthly living allowance. Each apartment must do its own buying, and run itself "for better or for worse."

Gindel told sceptical parents: "Unemployment is not a problem in Kiryat Shmona. The matter has been grossly exaggerated. They will manage."

The group will be assigned an adult counsellor, probably a graduate of one of the Ma'alot groups, while the town council has already named a liaison officer, since it is anxious for the Nahal group to settle down and succeed.

Enquiries about Nahal in Kiryat Shmona can be addressed to: Nahal, POB 186, Ma'alot, Western Galilee.

With one certain exception all is couched in metaphorical language. For example, failing eyesight is referred to as "those that look out shall be darkened in the windows," the loss of one's teeth becomes, "the grinders cease because they are few," and the failure of the bowels to act properly, "the doors shall be shut in the street when the sound of grinding is low."

The certain exception — alas, with advancing years I begin to feel it — is "they shall be worried about going uphill," which to my mind is the literal meaning of verse 12.

There is, however, another which is not quite certain. It is "the avi*yonah* shall fail."

Some regard the word as derived from the verb avah, which means to "desire," and render it "desire shall fail." Others however, (The Jewish Publication Society translation of the Bible) believe the word applies to the caper, and renders it "the caperberry shall fail."

There is, in fact, little difference between the two renderings. That person whose appetite is so jaded that he does not enjoy the piquant taste of capers has definitely lost all appetising desire.

Seoul has soul

CHRISTIAN COMMENT
Oikoumenikos

THE CHURCH with the largest membership in the world is in Seoul, South Korea. The Full Gospel Central Church now has over 100,000 members, not including babies or small children. I recently had a first-hand opportunity of observing this phenomenon when, together with Jerusalem Bible scholar Dr. Robert Lindsey, I attended an international theological seminary sponsored by the Full Gospel Central Church.

The church's huge auditorium, which seats 10,000 people, is filled for five services every Sunday, with overflow audiences participating in other halls through closed-circuit television. The pastor is Dr. Paul Yonggi Cho, a gifted preacher who is much in demand throughout Asia, and increasingly in North America.

"I shall never forget the weekly Friday night service, which lasts six hours (10 p.m. to 4 a.m.), and was attended by 10,000 people," said Dr. Lindsey, who is also a Baptist pastor.

How does this immense church avoid the dangers of anonymity? The answer is in the "home cell" Bible study and prayer groups. This church has over 7,000 such units which meet weekly in homes all over Seoul (now a city of eight million people).

I attended one of these meetings. Everyone took off his shoes at the door, as is customary in all Korean homes. People sat cross-legged or in half-kneeling position in a circle on the rug. All brought their own Bibles and hymnals and sang enthusiastically. A Bible passage was read and explained. People were exhorted to pray with faith in God who still brings healing to the sick.

At the gathering I attended, one young man who had indicated a personal need, knelt in the centre of the group as leaders put their hands upon his head and shoulder and prayed for him. In thousands of such weekly meetings, the Korean Christians find instruction, encouragement, and a sense of belonging.

Koreans provide a variety of explanations for the church's growth. One Sogang University student believes it is a consequence of the faith Korean Christians demonstrated during the Communist invasion from the North in the early fifties. Other Korean Christians believe that it is the work of the Spirit of God, who is present and active among their people.

The rate of conversion to Christianity in Korea is becoming so rapid, that some leaders were interested in turning to Jerusalem for lecturers, who shared the platform with leading Korean thinkers. The international seminar sessions were held in the beautiful National Cultural Centre in Seoul, with simultaneous translation into Korean and English.

Of particular interest to Korean scholars were Dr. Lindsey's in*sights into the Hebraic roots of* Jesus' teaching and movement, based on years of research and study with Professor David Flusser, of the Hebrew University. ALUMNI from educational institutions in Israel are making contributions in Korea. Young Jin Min, who wrote his doctoral dissertation on the Septuagint of Jeremiah under Dr. Emmanuel Tov and Prof. Shmaryahu Talmon at the Hebrew University, is helping edit a series of textbooks and a Bible encyclopaedia in Korean. Hee-Chul Lee, an alumnus of the Institute of Holy Land Studies, teaches Biblical geography at two large seminaries and writes an article on the Land of the Bible in a large-circulation Korean monthly.

The alumni also shared reports of the remarkable church growth in Korea. Young Jin Min told of a study which showed that in 1979, new churches in Korea were organized on an average of six a day. Overall, the Presbyterians in Korea are the most numerous, while the Methodists are second. The Presbyterian Theological Seminary in Seoul, with over 1,000 students, including many women, is the largest seminary in Asia. The extraordinary Full Gospel Central Church is thus only part of the phenomenon. The total Christian population in South Korea is now estimated at over seven million in a population of 38 million.

Sir Ludwig Guttmann

THE COURAGE, determination, and hard work of one man saved and made worthwhile the lives of many thousand severely disabled people throughout the world.

Sir Ludwig Guttmann, who died on March 18 at his home in England, was a pioneer in rehabilitation of people suffering from spinal cord injuries. Born into a modest Jewish family in the old German-Polish border province of Silesia, Guttmann first encountered paraplegics when he worked as a hospital orderly towards the end of World War I.

In 1923, he qualified as a doctor at the University of Freiburg and later became first assistant to Professor Foerster at the University of Breslau. From Breslau, Guttmann took up neurosurgery, and eventually achieved an international reputation.

He was dismissed from the university after the rise of Hitler, but was elected director of the Jewish Hospital in Breslau, a function which he fulfilled with great skill and courage. During his period as director, he saved innumerable Jewish lives — at great personal risk. Guttmann spurned a Nazi offer of protection if he would devote his knowledge exclusively to the benefit of "Aryans."

"Will I become a better surgeon by embracing Christianity?" he asked Prof. Foerster, who made the suggestion.

Guttmann emigrated to England in 1939, and carried out research at Oxford, but he maintained his interest in the care of spinal cord-injured patients.

In February 1944, he was asked to take charge of the newly created unit for spinal cord-injured patients at the Stoke Mandeville Hospital. Due to his drive and personality, the centre expanded rapidly and achieved an international reputation.

He and his staff trained many doctors from other countries in the specialized treatment of paraplegic and tetraplegic patients.

In 1948, Guttmann's breadth of vi*sion led him to found the Annual* Stoke Mandeville Games for the Paralysed, which, by 1952, had become an international sports event for paralysed people. Since then, the sports for the disabled have expanded throughout the world and Olympics for the Disabled are now held every four years.

In 1968, Israel was host to these Olympics. Aryeh Fink.

Stars go to war on newspaper

By WILLIAM SCOBIE/Los Angeles

ACTOR Steve McQueen says he had an attack of "terminal fury" on reading a recent story in the "National Enquirer," America's top-selling newspaper. It reported that the 49-year-old star, once a heavy smoker, was suffering from terminal lung cancer.

"It's ridiculous. A cruel lie," said the usually reclusive McQueen from his Malibu beachfront home. To prove it, he plans a multimillion dollar lawsuit against the weekly, which is bought by nearly five million Americans.

McQueen will not be alone. An inflamed and growing band of film and television celebrities has declared war on the sensational tabloid in a battle reminiscent of the days when Hollywood ganged up to sue "Confidential" magazine into extinction.

At least eight big show-business names are suing the "Enquirer" for a total of more than $66m. in what could prove a major test case of America's notoriously easy-going libel laws.

"I don't know anyone in the industry who isn't behind us," says Marty Ingels, a top Hollywood agent who is married to actress Shirley Jones. Together, they're suing for $20m. The "Enquirer" said Jones (of "Carousel" and other classic musicals) had become "a crying drunk," and credited her husband with "one of the most notorious casting couches in Hillywood."

Others pitching in include:

☐ Actress Carol Burnett, who wants $10m. damages because the "Enquirer" claimed she had a drunken set-to in a Washington restaurant with Henry Kissinger, then dumped a glass of wine over a guest.

☐ Veteran actor Rory Calhoun, who has filed suit for an identical sum over a story saying he had cancer. "A lie," says Calhoun, "that cost me four TV roles."

☐ Comedian Phil Silvers, also seeking $10m. because the "Enquirer" called him, among much else, "a has-been."

Steve McQueen

Carol Burnett

Behind them come a gaggle of TV personalities known to millions of Americans.

SINCE SURVEYS show the "Enquirer's" vast readership consists mostly of housewives in the 25-45 age group, America's most ardent TV-watchers, the showbiz assault could mean serious trouble.

But owner-publisher of the immensely profitable paper, Generoso Pope, 51, does not appear too worried. A former CIA operative, Pope bought the ailing "Enquirer" from the Hearst Corporation 28 years ago and sent its circulation soaring with a horrid blend of smut, sadism and gore which became known in the trade as the I-ate-my-baby syndrome.

In the Seventies, Pope, father of five children, cleaned up the paper's act, switching to a broader mix of celebrity gossip, practical advice ("help your marriage survive holiday stress") and cheap thrills ("I was abducted by space dwarfs and examined on their UFO for two hours").

Up went circulation again. That sort of success invites competition. Rupert Murdoch leaped into the battle with his "Star," and glossy magazines such as "People" and "Us" further eroded "Enquirer" sales.

When these fell below five million some 18 months ago, Pope ordered his large staff into the fray with the command: "Wash some dirty linen." Sizzling exposes along the lines of those in the old "Confidential" were sought.

POPE PAYS well for the goods, and he got his tales of mishap and misbehaviour. But could he also get sued out of business, like "Confidential" in the 1950s, when lawsuits by Robert Mitchum and others halted lubricious stories and sent circulation plummeting from four million to 300,000?

Lawyers in the case believe that is highly unlikely. The "Enquirer" has a large fact-checking and research staff and requires at least two sources for gossip items. They also say the paper has not lost a lawsuit in three years.

But in taking a stand the celebrities hope at least to muffle the "Enquirer," at best to upset a 1964 Supreme Court ruling that public figures cannot collect libel damages without first proving "actual malice" in publication of defamatory material.

"That ruling," said Ingels, "is a licence for papers like the 'Enquirer' to print just about anything they want about us." The difficulty of suing is compounded by lawyers who engineer costly legal delays that can run costs of a suit to more than $2.2m.

Samurai storm

By DONALD KIRK/Tokyo

JAPAN's most expensive movie yet, aimed at halting the steady decline in the country's film business, is ready to do battle at the box office.

Top director Akira Kurosawa was given a $7m. budget to make "Kagemusha", or the "Shadow General." It's his first Japanese film for 10 years, and its première later this month could be a turning point in Japan's increasingly mediocre efforts on the big screen.

"Every movie is a happening," Kurosawa told a reporter the other day, "I make movies like a child, without thinking of the message."

If Kurosawa preferred to avoid discussing the meaning of his latest epic, a Samurai tale about a thief chosen to double as a warrior leader, Japanese film moguls were happy to talk about its other aspects.

"We're sure the movie will make big money," said an executive of Toho, Japan's leading movie production company. A Toho official predicted the film would earn $10m. from its foreign distribution through "Twentieth-Century Fox."

Ironically, however, industry sources say Toho was initially extremely reluctant to produce the film at all and might well have turned down the project without prodding by two famed American directors, Francis Ford Coppola and George Lucas.

Coppola, aged 41, and Lucas, 34, both watched Kurosawa's earlier classics, "Rashomon," "Gates of Hell," and "Seven Samurai" while they were still in their teens and lobbied potential American investors before Twentieth Century Fox agreed to buy the overseas rights. They visited the film during shooting of Samurai battle scenes on Hokkaido, Japan's large northern island, and are listed as "executive producers" on the overseas version.

Toho executives insist they would have funded "Kagemusha" under any circumstances, but film critics and young film-makers blame the decline of the film industry here in part on the "conservatism" of Japanese production companies. "They are afraid to take chances," said Kazuhiko Hasegawa, a 34-year-old director of two films, one of them produced by Toho.

Film executives respond by blaming television. They also claim the Japanese prefer to spend their money watching sport.

Overall box office attendance last year was 165 million, down a million from the year before, while the number of films produced fell to 331, at least three-quarters of them soft-core porn. "Now there will be many more big pictures like 'Kagemusha,'" said a spokesman for Toei, a Toho rival. "It will help all of us."

Moscow poised to win space-shuttle race

By GEOFFREY HUGH LINDOP/London

AMERICA'S much-delayed space-shuttle programme has at last recorded progress, but it could well be beaten by the Russian shuttle called Kosmolyot.

The test programme on the main engines of the U.S. shuttle being carried out at NASA's test facility at Bay St. Louis, Mississippi, has been delayed by various anomalies, including fires in the engines under test.

Now a series of tests has been successfully completed on one engine which has totalled more than two-and-a-half hours of operation — equivalent to 19 flights of the space shuttle.

The thrust of the main engines will be augmented at lift-off by two solid rocket boosters. Solid-fuelled rockets tend to be more reliable than liquid-fuelled rockets — like those used for the main engines.

However, once ignited they burn for a specific duration and at a predetermined rate. Liquid-fuelled engines can be throttled back, switched off or restarted as required.

Testing of the solid rocket boosters was successfully completed in February in the Utah desert.

The mission control centre at Houston, Texas, has become alive as simulated flights are conducted every six to eight weeks. During these simulations two astronauts in the space shuttle are linked with control room staff via computers, which make the whole exercise seem real. Another group of engineers feed instructions into the computer which reproduces various fault conditions.

BUT NASA is still worried by the thermal protection tiles. Unlike the heat shield of the Apollo capsule which peeled off like an onion skin as each layer became heated on re-entry, the thermal tiles are designed to withstand up to 20 missions. Any badly damaged tile can easily be replaced in a similar fashion to carpet tiles.

That, at least, is the theory. Nobody foresaw how long it would take to install the tiles, nor the laborious task of checking and replacing faulty tiles. The result has been a delay in the shuttle's maiden flight from March 1979 to sometime between November this year and March of next. And such a delay could mean that the Soviet Union will beat the U.S.

Development of the Soviet space shuttle, known simply as Kosmolyot (Russian for space plane), began around 1971.

The Russians have opted for a fully recoverable space shuttle consisting of two stages, the booster and the orbiter. Like the American shuttle, Kosmolyot will take off vertically to reduce the strain on the wings.

The booster, manually piloted, is powered by jet engines which limits the craft to the atmosphere. After separation it makes a runway landing. Meanwhile, the orbiter, powered by three rocket engines, continues into earth orbit. At the end of the mission, the orbiter makes a runway landing at the Baikonur Cosmodrome.

A similarly designed craft had been the American first choice, but after a feasibility study it was found to be too expensive. Costs were estimated at $9,240m., but being fully recoverable, launch costs would be cut to $135 a kilogramme. By comparison, in 1971 the present U.S. space shuttle was estimated to cost $5,600m., launch costs $370 a kilogramme.

The high cost of Kosmolyot probably forced the Soviet Union to abandon interplanetary projects in the Seventies like the America Viking and Voyager missions.

Kosmolyot will be much bigger than the American space shuttle. Most of this extra size will be taken up with the propellant tanks, which on the American version take the form of a large external tan[k] ... tisoned once the shuttle is nea[r] orbital altitude.

It is difficult to find out ... Kosmolyot's progress. It ... derwent approach and landing ... in 1978 by being dropped from ... 95 bomber aircraft, much a[s] ... Enterprise, America's test ... space shuttle, was dropped fr[om a] converted Boeing-707 a ... earlier.

But the most significant ... progress came at the 30th [con]ference of the Internati[onal] Astronautical Federation. Soviet delegation hinted ... Kosmolyot would be launch[ed] ... 1980.

Kosmolyot can be mounted ... of a conventional expend[able] launcher rocket, like the P[roton] which is used to launch the S[alyut] space station, and this way he[avy] payloads can be put in orbit.

Running scared

By GAYLE FISHER
San Francisco

THE AIR is crisp and the sky is deep blue as a group of runners gathers at Stow Lake in Golden Gate Park, anticipating a fine afternoon's run.

The women in the group feel something else as well — a fear that has driven them to seek the protection of running in packs. Rapes and assaults are on the increase in San Francisco, with female runners among the victims. One woman jogger was murdered.

In the 27 months from December 1977 to February 1980, 51 rapes and 44 attempted rapes were reported in the park, with 15 of the attacks on joggers. The numbers from the last three months show 14 women were raped in the park, including four runners.

Throughout San Francisco, 72 rapes and 24 attempted rapes were reported in January — a 34 per cent increase over the same time last year, according to San Francisco police statistics.

"It's too dangerous for women to run alone," said Dr. Art Weinberg, an avid runner and member of the informal "Stow Lake Runners."

After the October 1979 rape-murder of 23-year-old Mary Bennett on one of the park's trails, the group sent out flyers to try to call attention to the problem, Weinberg said. About 15 women joined the group after that. He wishes there were more.

"It's sheer lunacy for a woman to run by herself at night," said Weinberg.

One woman running around the lake alone said she prefers solitary jogging because she "can think better." The nurse, who did not want to be identified, said she feels safe during the daytime but would never run alone at night.

"I know one girl who quit running altogether after that girl was killed," she said.

Other female joggers have studied self-defence or carry sticks, run with dogs or tote cans of Mace teargas while running alone.

Kathy Link, 37, who works for a jogging school called "Women on The Run," said the school was "flooded with calls" after the murder.

Al Casciato, who teache[s a] Mace class given by the San [Fran]cisco Police Officers Asso[ciation,] said enrolment has jumped ... last few months and many ... new students are female jog[gers.]

A woman leaves the tw[o-mile] course with a can of teargas ... special permit to use the ma[ce] ... seven years, he said.

The Police Department's ... prevention unit recently is[sued a] press statement warning ... dangers of running alone.

"A prominent factor in all ... cases is that the victim was ... walking or jogging alone pr[ior to] the attack," the release said.

Mary Boitano, 56, was att[acked] and raped in Golden Gate ... more than seven years ago. S[he] runs alone, but not in the ... "You just don't go run in spo[ts like] that anymore. I tell all my ... not to run out there," she sa[id.]

Dr. Joan Ullyot, a mar[athon] runner and author of two boo[ks on] running, said she still runs ... but takes her dog or a can of ...

"My general idea is, with ... cidents of rape increasing, ... run alone where you wouldn't ... alone. Some women think ... safe because they're moving ... they're less attractive and ... But that's not true."

It is generally accepted, however, that an Ehrlich success at the convention could herald moves to tie the party fortunes to Weizman.

In the meantime Weizman has left himself open to charges of sabotaging national interests by weakening the government while the prime minister is abroad conducting crucial negotiations with the American president. If Begin wished, he could exploit his defence minister's bad timing and orchestrate a "dump Weizman" campaign that would leave Weizman's supporters high and dry.

One fact is certain. Weizman has single-handedly thrown away any chance of becoming Begin's heir, much as did another one-time heir apparent — Shmuel Tamir, now of the DM. Herut insiders say the job was as good as in Weizman's hands, had he only been patient and paid lip service where it was due. Even if the Likud lost the coming round of elections, a Weizman-led party would have had a fair chance next time around, it is said.

The question now is whether Weizman merely did himself personal damage and added another dent to the government's already battered prestige, or whether he also gave the early-elections snowball the crucial push down the slope.

SHAFIR

districts, eliminating duplication and putting peripheral Tel Aviv areas under the Central District command. The Northern District is expected to remain as it is, except for the areas that will be put under the jurisdiction of the new Central District.

This decision — and other decisions reached yesterday and in previous sessions held by Shafir — are subject to approval by the cabinet.

At yesterday's meeting, which was the fifth of eight sessions in which Shafir is mapping the entire multi-year plan, it was decided to recommend that the government hire an additional 2,000 policemen who will be assigned regular beats in each of the estimated 800 local foot-patrol areas throughout the country.

Each of the beats will be analyzed for crime factors and the data will be computerized so that the patrolmen will be kept up to date.

Some of the rural districts will be patrolled in vehicles and for that purpose, police will ask for authorization to buy 100 new two- and four-wheel vehicles.

Each beat is approximately two square kilometres in size, and patrolmen will be able to cover their beats within 20 minutes to half an hour, Shafir's plan estimates.

Another proposal for the government in Shafir's plan, known by its Hebrew acronym as Tirosh, is the establishment of 45 new police stations over the next five years.

Twenty-five substations are slated for the Arab communities, which in recent years have been hit by a crime wave. Local Arab leaders have been asking quietly for better police services. The other 20 stations are slated for the south, north and centre of the country.

The new stations, combined with the foot patrols, are at the heart of Shafir's plan for improving ties between the public and the police.

When Shafir took office on January 1, he set a goal of upgrading public respect for the police and boosting police morale by improving the day-to-day relationship between the police and the public.

The administrative cutbacks announced yesterday are to reach 40 per cent within five years, according to the Shafir plan, with an immediate 20 per cent cutback during this fiscal year throughout the districts. Police sources say they expect the new Central District and the Negev to be the immediate target of cutbacks as job duplication is eliminated under the new arrangement.

There is no cost estimate yet of the implementation of the plan, which Shafir's aides emphasize is not a five-year plan but a "multi-year" programme. They say they emphasize this point so as not to raise expectations among the public or police.

Trading without any trend

Market report

By JOSEPH MORGENSTERN

TEL AVIV. — Neither the index-linked bond market nor that of equities was able to establish a clearcut price trend. In spite of the relatively lacklustre performance, trading turnovers maintained a moderately high level. Some IL320.6m. worth of shares and converted debentures changed hands while IL111m. of bonds were traded.

The Israeli pound withstood efforts at further devaluation and the local currency traded without any change in price in terms of the American dollar.

In the index-linked bond market there were few changes in the price levels established on Wednesday. Movements were minute and in both directions.

In the share market only the commercial bank group and real estate and land development shares were able to establish a rising market. Others were either stable or mixed. Specialized financial institutions, however, moved lower.

FIBI shares continued to carve out sizeable gains. Yesterday the shares jumped by 22 points for a 3 per cent gain. Leumi was up by two but IDB and Hapoalim gained only one apiece. IDB 7 options were ahead by seven points reflecting a gain of 1.3 per cent. Mizrahi and Union were unchanged while General Bank eased by four points.

Carmel (r) was down by 7 per cent as other shares traded quietly in the mortgage bank group.

There were few changes among insurance equities. Yardenia IL5 was down by more than 5 per cent while the IL5 shares slipped by four points.

While land development and real estate issues moved higher the gains, at best, were marginal. The biggest mover was Azorim (r) with a rise of 4.1 per cent.

Industrials were mostly mixed. Argaman pref. (b) lost 4.8 per cent but Haifa Chemicals continued to gain with a rise of 6.8 per cent. Phoenicia pref. was down by nearly 10 per cent. Polygon was up by 5 per cent but Taal(b) was down by a similar figure. The mixed trend extended to investment company equities. Elgar(b) scored a 9.4 per cent gain while other in the group traded within narrow margins.

Ezer Weizman's bid —

THE BOMBSHELL — a trite simile, but true — dropped by Defence Minister Ezer Weizman on television Wednesday night was calculated to cause the most damage to the government, and it did.

Mr. Weizman is not the first cabinet minister to have raised the possibility of early elections — which, technically speaking, is all he did on the Moked interview. But Mr. Weizman cuts a somewhat bigger figure than the NRP's Yosef Burg, the interior minister, or of the Liberals' Simha Ehrlich, the deputy premier.

The defence minister not only represents Herut, the main faction within the Likud, he is the second most powerful minister in the cabinet.

More important yet, Mr. Weizman is at the moment, for whatever reason, the single most popular politician of any party in Israel. In a direct election, he might easily have been the people's choice for prime minister. His call for the immediate dissolution of the Knesset — which is what in effect it was — is the most devastating expression of no-confidence imaginable in his own government.

It is not customary for any minister to so conduct himself in public, and the vitriol poured on Mr. Weizman's head by his Herut colleagues seems to have been fully merited.

Ordinarily, when a cabinet member decides that the government on which he serves is good for nothing, and hopelessly so, he steps down. That is the decent thing to do. Moshe Dayan did so when he could no longer stomach Mr. Begin's foreign policy direction.

A few weeks ago Mr. Weizman started throwing hints around that he might follow in Mr. Dayan's footsteps, and roughly for the same reason. Unlike Mr. Dayan, however, he evidently expected to bring down the government in the process. Then, abruptly, the hinting stopped. It may have dawned on Mr. Weizman that his departure would, as in Mr. Dayan's case, only result in a further strengthening of the cabinet's hardlining right-wing. That was not what he wanted.

Whatever it was that caused him to change his mind, and to come out with his guns blazing, the violent reaction of his party colleagues suggests that Mr. Weizman scored some direct and fairly deadly hits. But he may have hurt himself just as badly.

Whether opposition to Mr. Begin's leadership will now, as a result of Mr. Weizman's initiative, bring about a dissolution, is still moot. If it does, the defence minister will have to start looking around for greener pastures outside Herut, perhaps as leader of a new centrist group to be allied with the Alignment. But there will be little time left to plan such a move.

If the government manages to hang on, for all that, Mr. Weizman's position will have become untenable. If he insists on staying on it, he will compromise himself irremediably in the eyes of the people.

Arguably, he has already damaged himself badly by the atrocious timing of his offensive — at the very end of Mr. Begin's visit to Washington, and the start of a new effort to reach an agreement on the autonomy.

— and the autonomy talks

THE LOOMING governmental crisis is certain to cast a shadow on the 40-day last-minute autonomy talkathon that was the main practical result of Premier Begin's meeting with President Carter.

Unless the crisis is quickly resolved, it is doubtful whether the Egyptian government would care to pursue these negotiations with the present Israeli regime, or whether the Israel government would feel competent to conclude a final agreement.

In strictly constitutional terms, there is no problem. A caretaker administration in Israel has all the authority needed to run the country's affairs.

But in political terms what matters is the actual strength of the government. It is hard to visualize the present cabinet, with its slim support among the voters, making the sort of painful concessions that will need to be made — on the eve of a general election, yet.

There are good chances, then, that the May 26 target date will be scrapped by consent of the parties, until after Israel has settled its domestic differences.

If the crisis is quickly resolved, the outstanding issues of the autonomy will still remain to be disposed of. Mr. Begin won a little procedural victory in Washington, by getting President Carter — and, via telephone, President Sadat — to agree to hold the 40-day non-stop talks not in Washington, as suggested by the U.S. president, but alternately in Israel and Egypt. But on the big issues, which will determine actual control of the territories, there has so far been hardly any progress at all. Yet time has very nearly run out.

Mr. Sadat is reported to have waived some of his more extreme demands in the discussions with Mr. Carter. Thus he no longer insists on vesting the self-rule council with legislative powers. Earlier yet, he had agreed to leave it to the Palestinians, after the autonomy is set up, to negotiate such issues as water control.

Now it will be Mr. Begin's turn to start making a move towards compromise. One such move might be Israel's adopting Egypt's "Gaza first" idea — which Mr. Begin promised to Mr. Sadat, back in Aswan in January, to put before his cabinet, but has not. (Mr. Weizman told his interviewers he supported the idea.)

If even so minor a concession is too much for Mr. Begin's cabinet to endorse, perhaps it should indeed, as Mr. Weizman proposes, call it quits.

OBJECT LESSON IN IMPOTENCE

The political factors which led to the confused injection and hasty withdrawal of Israeli forces from South Lebanon were the straw that broke Ezer Weizman's back, writes The Post's HIRSH GOODMAN.

THERE IS A RUMOUR that a substantial reward is being offered to anyone who can make head or tail of the government's policies in Lebanon. Especially this latest in a series of inexplicable moves, when the defence minister ordered the injection of a limited force into the South last week, only to have it sheepishly withdrawn four days later — after the political damage to Israel had been done, with no clear military advantage secured.

This worse than ineffective response to the terrorist attack on Misgav Am on the last day of Pessah defies all logic. And that, perhaps, is why Defence Minister Ezer Weizman refused to allow Deputy Chief of Staff Yekutiel Adam to appear before the Knesset Foreign Affairs and Defence Committee this week to brief the members on the situation.

There is simply nothing Aluf Adam could have said that would not have made Weizman and the government look even more foolish than they already do over an incident that has served to emphasize the bankruptcy of a defence "policy" that is nothing but a succession of ad hoc micro-decisions with macro-ramifications.

Only his characteristic impetuosity can explain Defence Minister Weizman's wholly unjustified outburst last week against O.C. Northern Command, Aluf Avigdor Ben-Gal, after the general had suggested what everyone knew to be a fact: that Israel's policy against terrorism these past months has been tempered by political considerations. That Weizman should be uncomfortable with the facts is not Ben-Gal's fault, nor is it his fault that he is one of the few people familiar enough with the facts to be able to tell the truth about them.

IT WAS LESS than a year ago that Weizman himself announced to the world that Israel would hit at terrorists wherever they might be, at the time and place deemed most propitious. Israel would no longer pursue a policy of mere retaliation, he declared, but would initiate a war, based on recurring surprise, which would make it impossible for the terrorists to organize, train and maintain a viable military infrastructure.

But the policy was launched without any attempt to explain its necessity to the outside world, and Weizman's bellicose statements soon dissipated into puffball rhetoric as each bomb dropped on Lebanon unleashes a proportionate amount of diplomatic fall-out and American pressure to revert to a defensive posture and abandon the path of aggressive prevention.

The only reason Israelis did not question the government's tacit — and perhaps justified — compliance with international dictates was the lack of terrorist activity from the Lebanon. Simply stated, nobody noticed that the government's proclaimed anti-terror policy had vanished into thin air, and that nothing had been produced to replace it. Nobody, that is, except the military, whose countless requests for permission to pre-empt certain events on the basis of incoming intelligence, were turned down. It was only Misgav Am that reminded people that Israel had no cogent anti-terror policy. Ben-Gal obviously committed an unpardonable sin by saying so.

Ezer Weizman (Rubinger)

ONE CAN APPRECIATE the political restraints on pursuing an all-out aggressive strike policy against the terrorists in Lebanon. The Americans have always demanded moderation, knowing that continual punitive Israeli action could lead to general instability if the Syrians decided to react, with deleterious effects on the Israel-Egypt peace process. The Egyptians have also complained time and again that indiscriminate bombing of Palestinian refugee camps, where the terrorists maintain their bases, could not pass unnoticed and would not help to foster the developing relations with Israel.

As far as the world in general is concerned, Israel's image has been badly battered by the constant screening of the civilian casualties caused by IDF air raids in Lebanon.

It was clear to all that this was no time for trumpeting horrendous threats — even though Weizman may have done so as a deterrent rather than with any intention of carrying them out. But this does not mean that some alternative method of dealing with terrorism from Lebanon should not have been explored and adopted. And none was.

IT IS NOT one of the country's better kept secrets that there are serious differences of opinion between Premier Begin and Defence Minister Weizman. This was amply demonstrated on Wednesday night, with Weizman's call for early elections. The differences are on political as well as defence issues. The two men apparently rarely consult and there is little, if any, coordination of policy. Decisions are made in discord, not in harmony.

Moreover, the military has been excluded, as never before, from the government's decision-making process. In the past 18 months, Aluf Yehoshua Saguy, the country's chief intelligence officer, has been to two, at most three, cabinet meetings at which defence policy was being discussed and asked to contribute to the proceedings.

There has been no attempt to "marry" the defence and political realities into a cohesive policy, no permanent framework for estimating the political cost of any particular military action. It has been a matter of improvisation in every case — with political considerations generally prevailing. What we saw last week was typical. Immediately after the Misgav Am incident, the army proposed, among other things, that they be allowed to establish outposts in Southern Lebanon to facilitate early warning should the terrorists try to attack again. They claimed that their intelligence indicated that there would be more attempts, especially during Begin's visit to Washington and through to May 26, the autonomy talks deadline and suggested that it would be wise to inject forces into the South. This would not only discourage the planned terrorist actions, but would provide an additional security envelope around Israel's sophisticated, but non-hermetic, border defences.

After two days of procrastination, permission was finally granted, but with the proviso that the forces be limited both in size and in weapons; that the penetration be confined to the area under the control of Major Sa'ad Haddad; and that the move be purely defensive in character. This, the government hoped, would satisfy the demand in Israel for some retaliatory action without antagonizing the Egyptians or Americans.

It was a plan formulated from a position of weakness rather than strength, a purely demonstrative exercise rather than a practical operation for dealing with a specific security problem.

DESPITE all the limitations and reservations, hardly had the last of the less than two dozen armoured personnel carriers with some 100 men taken up position, than the order was given to withdraw. The army spokesman announced with a straight face that the decision had been taken "upon the IDF's completion of its operational task." It did not take much persuasion for military and defence officials to confirm privately that the real reason was that Israel was again bowing to international pressure.

Some say that the decision to withdraw was made when an informal message reached Israel that Washington was, to put it mildly, not too happy hosting Premier Begin while Israeli forces continued to be stationed on Lebanese soil. Others claim that someone in the government suddenly realised that the price Israel was paying for the limited military benefits was too high, especially when the Lebanese government demanded Security Council action and it looked as if all the members, including the U.S., would join in condemning the violation of Lebanon's sovereignty.

Whatever the reason, the hurried withdrawal not only testified to ineffectual planning and forecasting, but in fact constituted another victory for the terrorists. They had not only managed to attack Misgav Am, killing three and wounding 16, but also had the satisfaction of watching Israel sustain international condemnation and ridicule by mounting and then abandoning a military response significant only for its impotence.

FOR THE PAST few months, Israel has totally subjugated all aspects of its policy-making to the dictates of pushing through its position on the autonomy question. Nothing has been done on other fronts — including defence — that might conceivably jeopardize its relations with the international community in general, and the U.S. and Egypt in particular.

In effect this means — and the terrorists understand it to mean — that Israel's ability to respond effectively to terrorism has been curtailed to the point where retaliation is no longer credible. It may have been this realisation that encouraged the PLO to launch the Misgav Am operation and it could certainly provide the impetus for further attacks.

The dilemma in which the government finds itself is not enviable. But this does not preclude an evaluation of policy that would take into account more than the autonomy imbroglio. The obvious solution is the establishment of a policy-making forum which would weigh the overall picture and come up with a balanced package.

For years, the debate has raged about the desirability of a New Security Council that would with precisely the kind of dip with which we have just been It is essential that we look what happened at Misgav A The country's response to symptomatic of a general m and not as an isolated incide
